Class B attempt trespassing! no jail/probation only $250 fine.

anyone see a convicted criminal?

and the story about it is pretty messed up, showed up to my ex house at 4 AM (we were still together) she had another guy in there and had him sneak out the front door while I went up a window but she let me in and I left. Called cops on me next morning, got arrested but was always confused why she did this but then lawyer revealed she didn't want to get caught cheating so she got me arrested. hope she dies. but yeah.

My heart breaks for you sir. But I want more to the story. Like, did you suspect her of cheating and that's why you showed up at 4 am? because.... that seems a bit aggressive.

We only count felonies in here.

TooBurnt - July 1, 2024, 6:18 am

This is a crazy story if true. So how did you find out about the guy going out the front? How did you find out she was cheating? I have so many questions about this...

Suspected her of cheating, did get in a argument earlier but we plans to hangout. but she's shown up at my house/vice versa plenty of times forcefully.

4 years together too.

when I was at her place she was sending text to him the whole time of me there. she gave those text to detectives as "evidence" of her asking me to leave without her knowing it'll come back to me since im entitled to all her testimony.

got text logs and boom.

guy is a weirdo skinny loser. like total opposite of me too but she went to HS with him so idk how long its been going on for Something seems a little off about this story... Where you stalking this poor girl?

I was in a relationship with her for 4 years.....traveled to around 30+ cities with her too....even once got her pregnant and was a miscarriage.

a little more than just stalking some poor girl.

Class B misdemeanor??? That goes away in 5 years or so depending on what state your in. (from basic criminal background searches)

Wasn't the best boyfriend, but we had an argument earlier and came back after being out with some friends to make things up and she did that to me.

believe it or not, some women are just outright evil. what's something not to tell? never been abusive or anything towards her.. was I the best boyfriend? no cause I had terrible party habits. but the fact she went out to have another guy there and god knows how long it was going on for.

I myself couldn't believe it.. I had a panic attack the second the lawyer told me.

Kinda doesn't add up, don't you think?

you been with this girl for 4 years, went together to a lot cities together and even knocked her up once.

but you "went" through the window and the cheater dude "sneaked" out the front door.

Since It's unlikely she is a member here and will give her version, I guess we will never get to the bottom of this.

I guess you should leave her then and find someone else, plenty of fish in the sea.

The guy was someone she's known from HS. The text was him persuading her to call the police and pretty much talking about how he left.

She lives on a 3rd story. She wouldn't pick her calls up or anything when I showed up and I climbed up the fire escape and knocked on the window. She freaked out but remembering back she hid all the blinds and came back a few minutes later to open.

There is a ring camera that showed him leave cause she showed it to the investigator to show that "I showed up."

she was cheating on me and called the police in order for her not to get caught and got me kicked out.

the relationship was failing, but was something I wanted to see but regardless she was technically still with me and cheated.

she's evil, a narcissist.

just curious, before you get overly confident w/ this.

Is the fire escape to the window considered public property, or a natural way to access her apartment? For example, is it an emergency fire escape you shouldn't be on, or is it a normal stairwell for regular access as well as a fire evacuation route?

Were you invited over? Were you told to use the fire escape in writing?

Did she turn down your invitation to meet up before you went over there?

Did she invite you over at all, or did you just climb up the fire escape uninvited, unannounced, etc?

Not going to lie, it seems like you basically decided to climb a non-public fire escape, peep into her window & knock on the window to get her attention... and you are surprised that you are in trouble?

other questions:

- were you still dating technically when this happened? Or were you guys 'separated' or 'on break' or anything?

- have you ever used the fire escape to get to her apartment in the past?

The main things to understand:

- a judge & a jury do not need to take into account whether she was cheating or not
- the exact reason that she had for calling the police doesn't really matter much either here
- you most likely trespassed, uninvited, etc
- "hiding her cheating" doesn't make your crime any less criminal

No not allowed to use fire escape but did it anyways since I suspected her cheating. Yes I've done it before. Wasn't invited over but she has showed up at my place plenty of times. We were together for 4 years, showing up uninvited to someones house is different vs showing up to someone you sleep with every night. Mind you I was practically a resident of the place as I slept there or she slept at my place for the last 4 years. I was over there virtually almost every night.

Yes we were technically together and had plans on hanging out this day. I was literally there 2 nights ago.

Never said I wasn't not guilty. Regardless the motive of her calling the cops was in order for her not to catch me not cheating.

This post isn't about how I'm not guilty. I am, but you don't call the police on someone you love/are in a relationship with for showing up to your place something I've done 100s and 100s of times and so she has.

Her motive in getting me arrested wasn't because "I broke the law." Isn't it odd you call the police on someone you're dating for showing up?

This isn't about whether I'm guilty or not as that has been proved. The point is she was fucking some dude and only made a scene in order not to get caught. She has never had an issue before but now does since she had a guy there.

Do I regret it? No, since I found out what kind of person she is :) and now I don't have kids/married to someone like this. Saved me some time/money in the long run.

What she did regardless of me "going up uninvited" is wrong.

How was her calling the cops supposed to prevent you from finding out the truth? I don't understand that part. I just wouldn't open the door or window.

She called the cops in order to have me leave so this guy can come back up. The lawyer gave me the text and he is pretty much saying he is outside in his truck hiding and left some of his stuff upstairs and needed it back. The entirety of the text was him persuading to screw me over and that she can't have him seen. And thank god I didn't see him. She did open the window, I also made that argument in court that she should've waited until police showed up when I was outside not let me in. Think she just panicked/freaked out and just wanted to "ensure" me that she had no one inside once he went down stairs door. Not sure, she's done with.

But also when she did ask me to leave, I left. But prosecutor said "I left too late."

I never thought she'd do this to me in a million years.

Truth - July 1, 2024, 12:41 pm

my question is why did you stay with a women you thought was cheating?

4am is crazy too, seriously, why put yourself through this kind of stuff.

Like for me, if I even think there is any likelihood of a girl cheating on me, she is in the FWB category at best. Nothing serious about a relationship you dont have trust in or even have doubts in imo hindsight is 20/20 though, anything you wished you've done instead of how you played this out?

TooBurnt - July 1, 2024, 2:48 pm

This whole post screams she had a dude over and told you not to come. You didn't get the hint and showed up and climbed through her window. Fkn weird bro
