I'm still unsure, but I recall the massive online buzz around the lost underwater ship last year. It dominated headlines and conversations for weeks. On the other hand, a law permitting the sale of lab-grown meat in major stores was quietly approved in the US during the same time, with barely a whisper. I'm curious if anyone here has insights or thoughts on why important topics like this often fly under the radar, overshadowed by sensationalized news that seems designed to distract the masses.

Yeah, it can be possible that the focus on Donald Trump, for example, is a deliberate tactic to divert attention away from other important issues that may be happening behind the scenes. It's important for us as consumers of news to be critical and seek out information on various topics, not just what the mainstream media is highlighting.

Interesting. Was this also published on the news at the same time?

When the right hand moves you should be watching the left hand.

Great observation mate, the latest Trump BS is just more distraction. Real moves are being made behind the scenes like the war on food on a global scale.

What is happening is clear as day and it is happening right in front of us. We have allowed politics to truly divide this country in an extreme way. Both sides have high amounts of extremism and the media is just full of propaganda. This is not going to end well come election time. No matter the vote.

Now this has finished its freshness and is off the agenda

Divide and conquer, it's been a thing since the beginning of time.. If we're busy fighting each other our eye comes off the main problem.
