if you'd like I would sell monero to you anonymously but at a charge of 15%

I explained this in detail in a forum years ago. Someone who started the thread said he would send $100. After explaining how they lost track of their BTC-xmr and other money, he ran away without giving me money! I swore that from now on I would not help anyone for free.

I will wait for others with more knowledge to chime in, though I think Monero/XMR is almost untraceable once you exchange. Meaning it doesn't matter where it comes from really once it goes to Monero nobody can track it. So theoretically you could go from KYC/wallet to simpleswap to XMR and there would be the transaction from your KYC to simpleswap but once it hit XMR there isn't really any useful information.

Then when you want to swap back it really doesn't matter except end destination because nobody will see where it's coming from on Monero side. There are public/private/local nodes that do come into play but again I still don't believe anyone can make any real use of the information because of the way it is put in and taken out on XMR's side.

Here is what I would recommend:

KYC wallet or wherever the currency is, to another unassociated wallet, to simpleswap, to XMR. Can't hurt to use a no log VPN while you're doing it either if you're worried to add another layer.

Use Simpleswap.io, fast, reputable, and safe. No KYC. You'll just swap an existing crypto for XMR. Takes 15 minutes.

I use KuCoin, spread is much better than what the other exchanges are offering.

No need to KYC yourself if you know what you're doing.

How do you trade on kucoin without KYC? It's mandatory now. Sucks cos I loved that exchange haha.

You can trade XMR Monero at nonkyc.io exchange, no need KYC just email and google authentication
