

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Attention people wearing silvers!!

Bumface - August 9, 2024, 3:25 pm

Hello, I'm just wondering if I shoulda got a full silver chain instead of sterling silver (925), it's pretty weighted so I figured sterling would be more durable, but whenever people ask if thats fully silver I say nah it's sterling silver so 92.5% silver.

it's a 550mm long chain, 3.5mm width, 1mm depth if that's relevant.

Do you have silver or sterling silver, why?

Jamika - August 9, 2024, 3:53 pm

Bought one silver for friend along time ago cuz it look nice, didnt mow the difference tbh, but i dontthink its that big different anyway

Prawnster - August 9, 2024, 3:57 pm

Mine is full silver and I've worn it every day for like 4-5 years and it's still in very good shape; although I do make sure to clean it every so often and I look after it :D

Charlie Sheen - August 9, 2024, 4:02 pm

No jewelry for me. I can't stand the feeling on my skin. I only wear my smartwatch when I'm at work. Otherwise that thing sits on the counter on charge all weekend.

Cooligan - August 9, 2024, 4:03 pm

Bro don't feel bad about wearing sterling silver, the majority and I mean the majority of silver you see people wearing is either sterling silver or white gold. Platinum on the rare occasion.

N - August 9, 2024, 5:50 pm

Silver gay as fuck, just get gold.

1stAlucard - August 10, 2024, 3:59 am i only wear 18th century copper from the mines of botswana

Syndicate - August 10, 2024, 5:57 am

(Aug 9, 2024 04:02 PM)Charlie Sheen Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) No jewelry for me. I can't stand the feeling on my skin. I only wear my smartwatch when I'm at work. Otherwise that thing sits on the counter on charge all weekend.

The autism is strong with this one I see ?

Jk, I also don't like wearing any jewelry at any time either. I don't like them mostly because it gets sweaty underneath and then itchy gwiz - August 10, 2024, 11:38 am

Sterling silver is an alloy of silver and another metal, usually copper or nickel, that's stronger and more durable than pure silver. Sterling silver is typically 92.5% silver and 7.5% copper or nickel, and is sometimes called "925 silver" or stamped with a 925. The added metal makes sterling silver less likely to be damaged and gives it a shinier, brighter finish than pure silver, which has a grayish color. Sterling silver is often used in jewelry and other metalwork because it's more suitable than pure silver, which is too soft and malleable for many uses.

Probably would just get Sterling silver for jewelry. Also if you resell the jewelry most the time they give you that kind of price back and not for .999 silver value.

Personally, I would buy them a silver coin or small bar which may get them in to collecting it more, because that is where the economy will end up using some day. You can also buy things with pure silver all around the world, it's a global currency in a sense, same with the other precious metals: gold, platinum, palladium.

Bumface - August 10, 2024, 1:49 pm

(Aug 10, 2024 11:38 AM)gwiz Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Sterling silver is an alloy of silver and another metal, usually copper or nickel, that's stronger and more durable than pure silver. Sterling silver is typically 92.5% silver and 7.5% copper or nickel, and is sometimes called "925 silver" or stamped with a 925. The added metal makes sterling silver less likely to be damaged and gives it a shinier, brighter finish than pure silver, which has a grayish color. Sterling silver is often used in jewelry and other metalwork because it's more suitable than pure silver, which is too soft and malleable for many uses.

Probably would just get Sterling silver for jewelry. Also if you resell the jewelry most the time they give you that kind of price back and not for .999 silver value.

Personally, I would buy them a silver coin or small bar which may get them in to collecting it more, because that is where the economy will end up using some day. You can also buy things with pure silver all around the world, it's a global currency in a sense, same with the other precious metals: gold, platinum, palladium.

Thankyou, do you know much about watches? I have a Tissot T-Race MotoGP Chronograph 2023 Limited Edition and a SEIKO 5 Supercars

Limited Edition. Pretty sure one of these is actually special edition, should I sell that one and keep the other? I was planning on holding these till 2043.

Mr_Kh4os - August 10, 2024, 2:23 pm

(Aug 10, 2024 05:57 AM)Syndicate Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) The autism is strong with this one I see ?

Jk, I also don't like wearing any jewelry at any time either. I don't like them mostly because it gets sweaty underneath and then itchy

Same here, I also don't like certain textures of things so it could be that too lol.

gwiz - August 10, 2024, 7:57 pm

(Aug 10, 2024 01:49 PM)Bumface Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Thankyou, do you know much about watches? I have a Tissot T-Race MotoGP Chronograph 2023 Limited Edition and a SEIKO 5 Supercars

Limited Edition. Pretty sure one of these is actually special edition, should I sell that one and keep the other? I was planning on holding these till 2043.

No, I don't know much at all about watches. The ones you mentioned look cool but I've never heard of those brands, and I'd assume the brand of watch plays a big role in their future collective value.

I do know that a lot of jewelry can be bought at pawn shops for near "scrap metal" prices, or entirely just scrap metal prices if you buy enough of it, unless it's a known brand like Tiffany or Rolex.

kanarevojobote - August 11, 2024, 8:55 am

Its not a big of a difference, i doubt somebody is going to ask you what kind of silver is. And when it comes to durability, as long as you are not slamming it with hammer they are going to be the same.

Cooligan - August 11, 2024, 10:22 am

(Aug 10, 2024 07:57 PM)gwiz Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) No, I don't know much at all about watches. The ones you mentioned look cool but I've never heard of those brands, and I'd assume the brand of watch plays a big role in their future collective value.

I do know that a lot of jewelry can be bought at pawn shops for near "scrap metal" prices, or entirely just scrap metal prices if you buy enough of it, unless it's a known brand like Tiffany or Rolex. Don't forget about Patek Philippe and Movado watches. High class jewelry.

happygonutty - August 11, 2024, 2:59 pm

(Aug 9, 2024 05:50 PM)N Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Silver gay as fuck, just get gold. This made me laugh. Hahaha.

Just to share to you all, I only wear silvers or golds for rings and bracelets. Too bad I only sold my stuff to pay debts though I still want to buy again once I get back on track or I don't know. ?

Eran - August 13, 2024, 5:35 pm

This reminded me that I should really purchase a silver chain sometime soon!

TooBurnt - August 13, 2024, 5:41 pm

I personally don't wear jewelry, but pure silver is the way to go not that sterling stuff

Bumface - August 14, 2024, 4:47 pm

Do ittttttt!!!!!! Tell me what you get