For you that don't know, The Last Stand games originally were Flash Games.

That included

- The Last Stand
- The Last Stand 2
- The Last Stand: Union City
- The Last Stand: Deadzone (Multiplayer)

Considering all those games were made by a small team of 3 people, it's mind blowing. especially when you see the game depth improving as the sequels go on, I still remember Union City having CRAZY depth and playing it for hours when I played it back in the day.

They all ran in the browser, and I believe I played all of them. The games still can be played if you purchase them on Steam

What I remember clearly about those games was them being SO AHEAD of their time for being flash games lol.

They also made Kickstarter few years ago to develop a newer game and guess what, they actually did it.

Unlike 90% of the Kickstarters that end up going "thanks for money, bye", they actually did it.

Now again I need to remind you, TEAM of 3 people made all of that. They are currently working on remastering some previous games.

I look forward to their next projects and hopefully, they will deliver great games like before.

What about you? Have you ever heard or played those games?
