I've been permabanned from TV Tropes. The users there are notorious for requesting geolocation checks on suspected ban evaders. The site blocks you from registering with a VPN. Does anyone here have an abandoned TV Tropes account I could use?

Just get a residential proxy and use that. A lot harder to detect them.

Couldn't you just change your IP and make a new account?

If you mean on a local host, you're having a stroke. If you mean the cloud, it's overkill.

Absolutely, because no one else from Colorado would sign up on the site.

It's so rare that I meet someone today who hasn't heard of cloud computing. Even my boss at least has a grasp of it.

Did you even click the URL I linked to? This time I'm going to post it as an image to make sure nobody misses it:

No, I didn't. Still, they're not blocking everyone from the same state. My point stands. A VPN, Incognito Mode / Private Browsing, and some work to not draw comparisons to your previous accounts should be enough.

I usually know better than to ask another man about his business, but what exactly is your connection to this other forum? I don't know everything, and I couldn't possibly know everything, but it seems like based off that screenshot they're a little rough around the edges...

But yeah just like everyone else said, try incognito.

And act like a different person. Because if the mods know that by your typing you're the same guy, you're not gonna get away easily by just being you.

I doubt this guy is gonna go through THAT much effort. Honestly.
