I think that after 500 years people will remember everything. I don't know, everything changes, cars and technology, what do you think?

Well, I am unsure if mankind will even be around in 500 years. I mean, none of us ultimately know the answer to that question. I don't think I can imagine life in 500 years.

They'll be nostalgic for whatever technology they evolved upon? You can go buy a retro TV's from <1940s. Do you give a shit? Do you have nostalgia for one? The future will be the same.

Nostalgia is a sort of positive reflection upon something you lived through, not something you're aware of from the past.

Well, what are you nostalgic for from 500 years ago? Doublets? Bubonic plague? 500 years ago was all violence and disease and working all day in the fields in order to have enough porridge to barely subsist. If human beings last the next 500 years (by no means a sure thing), they'll look back on us the same way. As a bunch of fucking savages.

This perspective has influenced me, the future will definitely be the same interesting to thing nostalgia would be there that means that somebody has to live for 500yrs mby they would be nostalgic for a normal life like before instead of tech that makes them be here forever

Coraline was remastered after 15 years, and electric vehicles are copies of older models. There's also video games that aren't available to the public, some servers shut down. I don't know for sure but 500 years is further than now.

I'm thinking right now. What are some things we are nostalgic about of 1600s and I don't think there is anything.

My answer would be none.
