You need residential proxies that are not flagged by Facebook. You also can't use the same info or images as the system will flag that as well.

Hm, that's interesting, I would've thought a vpn and a vm would work...

Is the vpn running in the vm or outside?

They could have some super sophisticated (potentially AI) system that learns off your user behavior and matches you like that.

i'll try to get a residential proxy and give it shot, the VPN is running of the Host PC I have tried running in the VM itself still get prompt for verification, my other test is to get a loaner laptop see if in a public location allows me to create another facebook.

To avoid the accounts being linked and suspended, it would be best to use a multi location mobile proxy, and a cloning app that changes all the required parameters within the Facebook app, to avoid being detected that you're using the same phone to create the accounts. Not all clone apps will change all the required parameters for Facebook, the app I use for this doesn't work Facebook, only Instagram, Threads, and some dating apps.. so you will need to research the right one for your use case. As far as my knowledge, none of the free ones available in the Playstore will be enough.

Clean your device, then sign by phone, when he send code, press use an email, then use a fake email provider

I had a similar idea i do have a burner phone with a loaded app cloner i am still checking out which provider has the best residential proxy to use, but looks like as well if i hit a public wifi it runs a 50/50 chance of it working had a test yesterday with a loaner laptop and it worked fine did a couple more and 2 out of 5 worked maybe there is some sort of supercookie which would be interesting..

I'll give this a shot with a temp phone number and temp email.

howdy i am mostly interested in figuring out how the detection work

Approx how many accounts are you looking to create in total? You will have a higher success rate with mobile IPs then residential. If you find the right clone app for facebook use case, you should be able to create unlimited accounts as long as you have enough clean IPs for creation, as the right cloner will change all the right parameters so it won't matter how many times you use the same phone. Even will work with cloning emulators.
