Let me look at your computer, and I would figure it out. All I can tell you now is that the WiFi adapter isn't being detected. Could be because you don't have one (I would hope that you're not this dumb, but people do dumb things), could be a driver issue, a defect, virtualization, who knows? Do you have Internet on it?

Sparton how would I crack a WiFi password that I don't know anything about, all I know is the SSID.

See if the password is the same as the ESSID since that is all you have. I recently saw a WiFi network at a nursing home where the ESSID and password were the same except for capitalization. If there is such a thing as an online WiFi cracker, you can try that, too.
