Thread: At What Age Did You Stop Trick-Or-Treating?

DemonAsylum - October 1, 2024, 12:57 pm

I can't recall the exact age I stopped going trick-or-treating, but I do know it was definitely sooner than most kids my age. As in I stopped while they kept going for a couple of years at least. What about all of you? When did you stop and why?

Charlie Sheen - October 1, 2024, 1:06 pm

I think I was 12. I got into video games.

Fish - October 1, 2024, 1:07 pm

I'd say I probably stopped at around age 14ish? I can't completely remember, it was such a long time ago

I think I was around 17 or something. Hard to remember. Was just fun hanging out with some of my friends to get some free candy.

I'd say that's pretty late to trick or treat. I feel like I started being the oldest person going around and knew I had to call it

Stay on track with it. Easy to fall off the wagon so to speak if you slip up even just a bit. Complacency is a bitch.

Oh yeah. Absolutely facts.

I took a break from gym/exercise awhile ago, and bro... my own brother said "yo you're getting fat" ?????

That triggered me and thankfully I got back into the workout regime... damnnn

And a harsh lesson to learn!

Before my shower I tend to do a quick back to back 2 minute workout. Gets me sweaty and sore.
But it's working! Getting clean and lean!

Oh that's integrated for life. I cannot give enough emphasis how much of a positive attribute it has been for my life.

Skin feels good

I feel crazy fresh (EVEN if I slept shit)

Super wide awake ready for a full day of work!

These days I start with hot water for a bit, but finish off with 10+ mins of cold.

I've done them here and there, but never committed to the point that I'd be able to get whatever full/best benefits they may be able to provide.

Did you feel afterwards that you just kind of outgrew it? Friends weren't going either maybe?

My home situation wasn't ideal at the time at all, the neighborhood I lived in at the time didn't trick or treat. I'd have to go to my grandparents to do so and that was the last time I did.

Aww man that blows ?

So you definitely would have done it for another year or 2 otherwise it sounds like. That sucks though. Glad you got to enjoy it up to the age you did at least.

I stopped trick-or-treating at 16 or so because the thrill left me and I found more entertaining things to do with my friends at the time. Since then I've had a couple of partners that had a child or more, so I'd tag along with them because they're kids and deserve to have fun. I still celebrate Halloween and like to dress up and/or decorate for the occasion though.

123browser - October 3, 2024, 2:53 pm

Oh... you guys stopped? Might be time for me as well. I'll enjoy one last round this year tho

To be fair I think by or around that age, most have or do stop anyway. You just start to feel over it, you can get candy on your own if you wanted it that bad already, and or you just feel as though you're a little old for it then.
