Thread: If You Could Speak To A Loved One, What Would You Say?

Prawnster - October 2, 2024, 11:11 am

I mean, if you could speak to a loved one that has passed on - Is there anything you feel has been left unsaid?

That I love them and that I am sorry.

That's a nice one at least, what would you be sorry about if you don't mind me asking?

Just how I wasn't there enough. My grandfather had 8 heart attacks and was surrounded by nothing but negativity. It is honestly ashame what happened.

You're all good man, shit happens, life happens. Not everything is in our control and we need to learn to accept that.

Acceptance is a big part of being able to move on mate, glad you are processing it well.

Acceptance is an enormous factor in that. The stages of grief can be fucking miserable man seriously. I appreciate it though man

It is alright man, I really do appreciate it. Loss can be tough and stressful but, in the end, you'll make it out. You just gotta want to.

Well said buddy.

Healing takes time that's for sure.

I don't know what I would say, I know I wish my grandparents got to meet my kids. I'd probably tell them all about my kids and my wife.

Yeah that's a fair one tbh, its nice to think about grandparents meeting their grand-kids. :(

I'd tell my best friend how much he meant to me. Lost him last summer and never got to tell him that because I never expected him to go so soon.

I feel like I was always somehow connected to my grandpa. He absolutely adored me, and the love went both ways. I haven't had any signs from him since he died but I always have a subtle feeling he's watching over me.

To answer the question, I guess it would be whether that's the truth or not?

2xTheTap115 - October 22, 2024, 11:42 pm

I guess it's just that I'm sorry, that I miss every day and that I regret that we didn't get to talk and explain everything to each other to the end.

If I could, I wont.

They're dead, I've already grieved. Talking to them again would just make things worse or complicated.

sharn - October 23, 2024, 5:54 am

I feel like I have said everything I needed to, but I would still tell my father I love him and wish him peace.

Hmm, I would speak to the one grandparent that I never had a chance to meet because they died before I was born. I only know what people have told me about them, so it would be nice to get to know them personally.

That's a nice one tbh, getting to know relatives and family that you never got a chance to is a great way to use this I think.

you took the slowest route of suicide and we don't even get to know if it was intentional because there was no note, we're all scared to be here and our potential you didn't have the right to take your life I'm sorry I wasn't there for you I tried to be it's hard when someone is looking up to a person as a role model and it's not what they're trying to be. I thought cutting you off was the right thing to do you were only using me to get harder drugs at that point even if our friendship was real and I love you dearly. If I'd known how to be the role model you needed I would have been and I'm never going to forgive myself for not being there. My only question is was there ever really the option to save you.

diablospartan - November 5, 2024, 12:56 am

StpPal2415 - November 8, 2024, 2:59 pm that i really miss it all and that it was beautiful with us 2 but i will walk away in peace after that I would talk to my grandma who passed away a few months after I was born.

She gave me a teddy bear when I was born and I've kept it safe with me for the last 28 years. I've been told she adored me and would look after me a lot before she passed.

I would get to know more about her and let her know that although I don't have the memories of meeting her, I feel her love and cherish it every time I see that teddy.

Another is my grandfather, the husband of the grandma I just spoke about. He died a few years back and it broke my heart. He was essentially the head of the family and loved by all. He was the sweetest and most comical old man I'd ever known and I loved his banter and cheeky smile and laughter.

In my teenage years I became quite a recluse and stopped saying hi to people when they would visit, etc and I regret all those missed memories with him I could have had, had I just left my room to say hello.

I got to say goodbye before he passed and he told me he loved me and that he was proud and that he wants me to focus and do well and I think I'm doing that. I just wish I could give him another hug tbh.
