Thread: Are you afraid of the dark?

plops - October 3, 2024, 12:32 pm

I am a grown man tasked with providing and protecting my family.

But when i wake up in the middle of the night to pee, i am always nervous in the dark. I am afraid something other than my cat is going to swipe my feet from under the bed.

Is it just me

ahw9n2io8wd9h - October 3, 2024, 12:34 pm

Used to be when I was a kid, my spine would feel a chill whenever I went into a dark place.

Now I find navigating without light kinda fun. Indoors you can tell where the walls are from the ambient noise reflecting off of them when you're close.

Deany - October 3, 2024, 12:35 pm

At my own place ? No lol. In a forest maybe, who knows what lurking in there.

sharn - October 3, 2024, 12:39 pm

Nope, only when I hear strange noises.

Otherwise I am fine with it.

A transhumanist time will come when people will be able to exchange their eyes for reptilian-like eyes.

Yeah i was thinking about transferring my consciousness to an arduino and replacing my eyes with night vision goggles.

Maybe that's what it is, making up scenarios that don't exist. I should learn how to accept the spiciness though

Then you'll be glad to know that your brain has the shitty habit of filling in the blanks. If you're actually thinking of something watching you, there's a good chance you'll see something in the dark cause your brain will try to fill that place in with something.

Main reason why I avoid looking in mirrors at night.

As a kid yes but not really. The only time I'm afraid of the dark is if I'm like in the woods, pitch black, that can be scary, even with lights / gear and a gun. That level of pitch black is unmatched, even with fairly powerful lanterns, headgear, I can usually see at most maybe 10 feet in front of me.

Prawnster - October 3, 2024, 1:44 pm

Nah I fuckin love the dark hahaha I feel like I thrive in the dark honestly.

Man I have yet to be in a scenario like that. I like to watch videos of people going deep into caves and i always stress about what if their light went out. Just thinking of that darkness stresses me out.

Secrets - October 3, 2024, 1:48 pm

I understand why darkness can evoke fear or discomfort in some people due to its association with the unknown.

123browser - October 3, 2024, 3:01 pm

I thought we spoke about people... If not then no

Charlie Sheen - October 3, 2024, 3:04 pm

Not really. I used to be. I think if I was somewhere that I didn't know I might be a little bit.

SuseGD - October 3, 2024, 3:53 pm

When I was younger, I remember being afraid of the dark all the time. Now, though, the dark doesn't really frighten me too much. It's just the opposite of light, and there's nothing much else to it.

Radi - October 9, 2024, 2:04 pm

When I was a kid I was terrified to turn off the lights. I would turn off the lights and book it to the my room felt like something was full sprint chasing me the worst thing about it is that at my grandparents house they saw a shadow figure come out of one of the rooms and walk back in since they were in the village side so they had their front door open and I was sleeping in the room next to it. Once I was told next day I left the house and went home but now as an adult I'm fine with it.

Eran - October 9, 2024, 2:10 pm

Not really. Only time is when I have a scary dream and then I have to go pee. Hell, not even having to go to pee, but just laying there still confused from my dream gives me the chills.

Dark night either at home where it's nice and quiet or nice dark beach or really any of it, absolutely SLAPS.

Pancake Boat - October 9, 2024, 3:42 pm

Used to be for a long time. Now I don't care at all.

I can't even imagine a dark beach Hell no as an adult I wouldn't physically be there without a bright LED lamp. I have attempted to go to the beach at night the vibes were a no go and the people that are there walking around give me shady vibes. To each their own but that is super scary for me.

Yin Yang - October 9, 2024, 4:59 pm

Nope, I'm not afraid. If i was in like an empty big building that was dark, that might give me a little scare.

Now imagine you see in the corner of your eye a shadow that darts fast to one side instant GTFO. I am ok with empty big building but if they are dark and abandoned I avoid them since there can also be homeless people in there that are dangerous.

Mooooookie - October 9, 2024, 6:25 pm

No, I can't say that I'm afraid of the dark. My eyes tend to get adjusted to the dark pretty quickly, and can usually see a little bit when it's dark in a room.

Haha nahhh mate honestly, the beaches by me are quiet at night so only a few people, idk it's just like so peaceful.

No cars, minimal amounts of people and the waves just crashing about corrr.

I used to be very afraid of the dark when I was a young child. However, I haven't been afraid of the dark for a very long time now.

Ive never been afraid of the dark and luckily my son is the same. I feel like that would be a hard aspect of parenting.

I actually love the dark! Especially before going to sleep, I want absolute darkness around me.
