Thread: Add a feature to something already existing & become a millionaire

Innovation doesn't always require creating something entirely new from scratch. Instead, by improving or adding a valuable feature to an existing product or service, you can create significant value and potentially achieve great financial success.

This concept is often seen in the tech industry, where many successful companies have thrived by enhancing existing technologies or services. For example, adding a new functionality to a popular app, improving the user experience of a website, or integrating new technology into a traditional product can make it more appealing to consumers, leading to increased demand and profitability.

In essence, the statement "add a feature to something already existing & become a millionaire," emphasizes the power of incremental innovation and the potential for substantial rewards by making meaningful improvements to what already exists.

Does this resonate with any ideas you're currently working on?

Do you mean so they wash easily? Or so you can have a drink? You'd have to make it so they don't cause any rust though!
