Thread: What type of group is missing on HF

Chrome - October 7, 2024, 5:47 am

Hey guys,

It's been a while since I have been in the HF space and I am slowly finding my way around to see how much this has changed in almost a decade since my last visit. I see that there are more groups and new types of groups. I also see there is crews...not too sure how i feel about that but that's change.

What kind of group is missing in HF do you feel? I don't know too much about the current groups but I will have a deep dive.

One of my goals in my return to HF is to own a group so it would be handy to see what is missing. I may look at bringing my old sub-group back called Wallflowers. It was a group that was focussed on personal life and would tackle a lot of social issues. I think in this world that is becoming more and more important.

If anyone is looking to sell a group please let me know. I will be in chats with Omni to get approved ASAP to own a group.

But it's important to have a group that will bring a positive impact to HF and also help build up some of the lesser busy forums areas in HF.

I'm keen to hear your thoughts.

When I started Benevolence, I thought two types of groups were missing.

1. Strictly invite-only groups with high standards of quality. No recruitments, no buy-ins. This is where I tried to position Benevolence.
2. Groups with a very specific focus. A gaming group, an anime group, a marketing group, etc. With different sectors and recruitments and such. I still think this is missing from the forum.

Anime group when ? Make it happen please

That's interesting. Something else that is missing completely is a car related group.

You've got the wrong guy I'm sorry. Maybe I can get someone to so that as part of my future group?

Exactly! A group with a niche/focused on one topic.

I would be interested in a car group myself. Not sure we've ever had one here.

Also, this group is currently for sale if you want to try them:

We have, there was a group called torque when I was last on HF. They were focussed on cars and engines.

I do recall torque now that you mention it.

I don't think I was all too active around that time, unfortunately.

Yeah mate. Cameron I believe was the owner of it. What do you reckon Cameron, should Torque come back?

Hopefully gaming can be revived in the near future!

Yeah, that's fair. Probably not a bad idea too. run competitions and stuff too. Instead of buy ins and recruitment, maybe you gain access to the group by winning a gaming competition?

Waiting for you to make the group and invite me. Already got that sweet ub.

As for the group missing? Something that spurs interaction both within the group and externally. A lot of groups do things in private, but we need a very public engaging group.

Philosophy should be a group. If not I will make it one.

I miss AnimeFAN!

I've been in several groups over the last decade and AF was probably the most active group.
And I'm not just saying this because I'm a weeb.

All the members shared the same common interest and got in because of passion.

It wasn't another money-focused/buy-in group.

Many groups force activity to retain membership but AF always had users that participated because they wanted to.

Movie nights, reviews, HF writers but for anime, guides, stickies, recommendation threads etc

I'd love to revive the group, but it won't be the same.

All the old fags are no longer active on HF or they're banned, with only a handful remaining.

AA section is dead as fuck.

Also if you get a group with a subforum or two you can run multiple group ideas under one. For example, the primary would be gaming with a subsection for cars and the other for anime with the overall theme/ub being hobbies/passion.

This wasn't very popular but, we are missing a group like Dawn.

Philosophy, psychology, social studies, etc. A group focused on that type of discussion.
