Thread: Any Recent Regrets?

Yanix - October 8, 2024, 4:40 am

I've been thinking a lot about recent decisions or moments that made me feel a bit of regret.

It can be something small, like skipping a workout or missing out on an opportunity or something bigger, like a tough choice at work or in relationships, I'm curious to know what's something you've regretted lately?

Sometimes it helps to know we're not alone in our regrets!?

Yeah, there is a lot of times where I will be doing something to avoid spending time with family. I then will look back and be like fuuuck, I really need to spend more time with my son...

As a family man, I can totally relate to that. It's so easy to get caught up in daily tasks or distractions and then realize later that time with family slipped by. Brother, the fact that you recognize it and want to spend more time with your son is what really matters. It's never too late to make those moments count and even small efforts can make a big difference! ?

Yea I agree on family. I don't have kids, but feel like I need to spend more time visiting my parents. They did raise me after all, lol.

Outside of that, my main regrets are probably just a few financial things from a few years.... but you live and you learn.

Not really, every decision I make is a lesson.

Not grinding hard enough

Mxstermind - October 8, 2024, 12:57 pm

Not being as smart as I am today 2-3 years ago

Radi - October 8, 2024, 1:27 pm

Spending way too much money on things like cars and electronics when in fact i did not need it.

What's your plan moving forward to stay on track?

Sometimes it's hard to find the right words in the moment. Maybe next time, just keep it simple and genuine, she might appreciate the honesty more than a perfect line. You never know unless you try ?

Not that I can help this, but I regret getting injured. I checked this post out as it was tagged olympians. I had multiple mid-major D1 offers this summer to transfer for track but couldn't accept them due to costs. I was training under a former olympic trials finalist that should have made and medaled in the 2020 olympics, but he was telling me how I should end up being a top 100 collegiate athlete this spring as a sophomore. I just feel held back by an injury that I'm going to physical therapy three times a week.

Man, that's really tough. It sounds like you were on an amazing path with serious potential and I can imagine how frustrating it must be to deal with an injury right now.

Wishing you a full recovery and hope you're back stronger than ever!"

Yeah dude, I won $1000 on sports bets last night with $80 bet and I went to casino and lost it all without cashing anything, I kinda regret it.

That's quite the rollercoaster! Winning $1,000 must have been a great feeling, but losing it all at the casino is rough. At least it shows how fast things can turn around. Next time, maybe you'll cash out and take the win!

Not buying btc when the etfs were launched is my biggest regret this year

Jinu - October 9, 2024, 4:00 am

That's an interesting question. Recently, I've regretted not taking the time to learn a new skill I've been wanting to pick up. Life gets busy, and I keep pushing it off. It's easy to let those opportunities slip away. I think sharing these moments can definitely help remind us to prioritize what truly matters. How about you? What's been on your mind lately?

I definitely had to do it, I got a trip planned for tomorrow so that extra 1k would be really nice.

Missing out on opportunities like that can be frustrating, especially with all the hype around it. But there will always be more chances in the future. ?

My biggest regret is being too nice mixed in with being an introvert. Recently I've been trying my best to change that.

Dont be too nice, and don't be an introvert. Terrible consequences come from it.

Being too nice and introverted can definitely feel limiting sometimes. But I think it's all about balance, staying true to yourself while setting boundaries. It's awesome that you're making those changes!

That's exactly it brother. Staying true to myself but setting boundaries.

I overlooked a lot of actions because I didn't set the right boundaries and in the end I got hurt.

Not fun !

Good part is you're learning from it and the more you set those limits, the stronger you'll feel moving forward ?

Honestly, I don't really think I have any recent regrets. I have been pushing myself to complete my graphic design degree and everything has been going great with that so far. If any I would say it would be that I am introverted and sometimes don't talk a lot to others as much as I end up wishing I did after we cross paths. Been getting much better at that and it feels great to make new connections.
