As a kid I was always fascinated by cheating in games not sure why, and this is what got me into hacking and malware development.

What about you guys? What are your experiences with game cheating, exploiting etc.

I grew up around a game called "black hawk down" and I thought it was fascinating cheating, I then learned about cheating, created my own cheats for that game, but the thing that got me into "PC hacking" was getting hacked when I was a kid, I was so blown away with the whole concept and wanted to learn myself and here I am 10 years later lol.

But, yea, I remember making game cheats for Black hawk down and it was honestly the most fun I have ever had, I never EVER knew how to make an ingame menu, was always "trainers" where you would have to tab out of the game and click the cheat you wanted, was fun times.

CS: Source back in 1.4 had a lot of cheats. I liked using the aim bot on lan games at school.

" For as long as I can remember I have cheated. I've cheated in pc games, console games, phone games. Both in single player and online ones. I cheated the security of programs I stole from the Internet and bypassed license verification not only in Windows. I didn't pay for Winrar. And I can't afford internet so I bought an antenna and steal wifi from kfc. I chose the path of the digital samurai " ??

I was more interested in HOW they made the cheat rather than the cheat itself.

Used cheats for a few times in CS 1.6 / GTA SA when I was 13-15 because it was interesting what is it.

As for me better is without cheats playing

Cheating in games can be fun for sure

I started with game save modding using Modio when I was 12. I ended up being infected with a RAT after a while and that put me on the path of learning to hack.

I also developed cheats for GTA IV on Xbox 360 & PC and some for GTA V in the early stages.

I ended up growing into the 2010-2014 "Twitter scene" of "hacktivism", eventually leaving that behind when I got engaged so as to avoid leaving my lady behind if I ended up in jail for dumb shit.
