Thread: Adults and Politics?

Anyone else's father can only conversate about politics?

My dad has some very controversial opinions about politics etc, and the only thing he can ever talk about is those political opinions.

And it's really embarrassing especially when guests/friends are over, all he does is argue his opinion to the point where he's literally SHOUTING at people and forcing his opinions, views and his limited experience onto them...

It's hilarious to watch sometimes, but still very embarrassing and literally just immature/disrespectful, it's like he just cannot accept their opinions.

Anyone else have similar experience with their family/friends/colleague?

I feel like it's just their generation tbh.

Younger generations like millennials and genz are definitely big into politics as well, but it's not their entire conversation piece.

I don't talk about politics and will avoid conversations with people because it never ends up good. People always get into their feelings and tbh its all so shit anyways I can't trust any of our choices.
