Thread: Israel Strikes

Israel has conducted strikes in Iran.

Currently there is no information on how severe the strikes were or where they targeted other than they did not target energy infrastructure.

Will update as I find out more information.

I wish this war would end soon feel like its been going on so long

A second wave of strikes is occurring and strikes are set to go on for several more hours according to CNN.

If trump becomes president he will stop the war.

Mmmmh, this doesn't sound good. Besides, North Kora just sent soldiers to fight in Ukrain with Russia, sounds like a good beginning for a WW3 ?

BRICS vs OTAN, the US will then send American soldiers, then maybe India or China will join, then Europe, boom, WW3 buddy

Israel did these strikes reportedly using jets which confirms what we already know that Russian and Iranian defense systems are no match for US jets as all of them returned home safely. I am curious to know which jets they used though because they have our F15, F16 and F35's.

Are we taking side bets on whether Iran will do another tit-for-tat strike in return?

They will back up if they manage to downplay the Israeli strike. Otherwise, they will have to perform the show again like the last two times.

Unfortunately, when their ballistic missile goes through Israel's air defense and civilians are killed, things will change because then there are no limits. Iran is huge, but Israel is far more capable of striking wherever it needs to. It should not be forgotten that Israel is a nuclear power with up to 400 bombs.

I won't jump to conclusions because I always wait at least a week after an event until the information is filtered out but according to some information, about 100 planes participated in the attack. According to the information that is circulating, the factory for the production of rocket fuel was destroyed, several military facilities were damaged and all 4 s-300 missile systems were destroyed too. Around 10 Iranian soldiers are killed. I believe that a lot more will be known in a week. Regardless of Iran's attempts to downplay the power of the Israeli attack, this was a great exercise by the Israeli Air Force and proof that they are capable of striking anywhere with precision.

I deeply doubt that India would engage in any war, especially in Europe. They are more focused on development and not on destruction and wars.

For China, this is more possible because they are desperate to become a military power with more influence in the world.

We (Jews) would like the same. No one (except the far right) wants a war. Wars do not bring anything good, but unfortunately, we are surrounded by people for whom war and destruction are the only meaning of life.

Ok.to summerize things , iran has communicated to intermediaries that it would not respond to an attack as long as it remains limited and does not target critical infrastructure, such as oil refineries, nuclear facilities, or key leaders. Acting on this information, Israel executed a strike that avoided these critical targets.

This is funny response from Israel from my pov

The USA was telling Israel to avoid nuclear/oil facilities and energy infrastructure to avoid escalation.

My guess Israel lessened their response in fear of losing US military aid.

Good thing that Israel listen to usa , or thats what we think anyway

Iran has ordered retaliatory strikes against Israel, the strikes are expected possibly within days and before the US election.

These strikes are supposedly going to be "definitive and painful"

We can then expect Israel to strike back and this time it will likely be nuclear and oil facilities.

Yeah, the whole "conflict" between Iran and Israel is looking fake to me. It seems that they're working together to perpetuate this kabuki theatre. The footage of the Iranian "missile attack" on Israel was laughable. I've seen fireworks that look more dangerous than those "missiles". They were like floating firecrackers that made no impact on landing.
