Drawing a line using the ruler. It may look easy. But my line is not always straight.

A lot of things. I'm only really good at writing essays, creative writing, literature analysis.

Basically I'm better at stuff that's supposed to be hard because this specific learning disability I have ruins everything else like riding a bike, sewing, knitting these are all things I cannot do and I keep my driving to nearby places because driving is otherwise so hard. Tying shoe laces. Ugg.

I'm terrible at saying no tbh.

I take on a lot more than I should at times simply because I don't like to let people down, however this results in me getting overwhelmed with the work load and not being able to manage it all without wanting to pull my hair out lol.

In the end though, I always manage.

It should be easy to remember birthdays, but I am lost without reminders.

Game - October 27, 2024, 8:23 am

Apparently doing what my wife asks me to do. I'm still learning haha.

You are not alone in that. The effort is what matters most.

most.

Yes sir, as long as I do my best is all that matters.

Remembering people's names even if I've known that person for a while.

Names can be tricky to remember. Try repeating the name in your head a few times, it might help.

Hahahah yeah, this is normal mate don't worry ?

Mine is the same.

If she asks me to do stuff, it's like it gets deleted from my brain as soon as she's finished asking me to do it and idk why.

I'm not bad at cooking actually.

I used to manage a pizza place long ago, and I learned a lot about cooking there actually.

Much more than just pizza & subs. I'm talking fish, steak, pork, chicken, pasta, salads, and more.

I am terrible at remembering names and faces....makes it interesting when I'm in sales.

I can imagine. In sales, forgetting a name or face adds an extra level of challenge.

Sure does, it's that bad that I'll get their names and sit them down. I'll walk to my computer and come back and I've already forgotten their names....

One thing I've started to do is write it down while it's fresh.
