Thread: Will you commit to looking at the sky with me?

As I have discussed in several places, there are orbs of light that appear in the sky. There are specs of white you can see even in the daylight that can move within clouds, travel across the sky at warpspeed, and more.

The world is distracted by boring ol' drones.

They do in fact come in fleets, we saw those too. We've been tracking this all since early October, after our first sighting of orbs of light moving in ways that our planes & drones simply cannot. It's okay though - they correlate. Saw the orbs? Expect the drone fleets soon. See the drone fleets? Look for orbs.

Will you commit to spending time outside, looking for anomalous flight?

Whether it's cloudy & you are looking for faint circles of white traveling until they depart the cloud & become visible, or looking for drones that shift between glide & hover modes, or shine bright lights and then don't, or looking for the hovering white orbs in the distant sky that appear to warp into space, or the hovering orbs over neighborhoods across the world, color-shifting and usually preceding the drone fleets

... whatever you look for, just look for things that don't quite add up. Keep track of it all, keep an open mind, and keep your eyes on the skies.
