Thread: Covid Vaccine

Are you getting the new Covid vaccine that was released last month?

Me personally, I got my shots and I'm fine the way I am now.

I'm not vaccinated, just something I don't want to think about getting.

Fair enough. Recently there was a thing saying you should get one every year but imo I feel like that's over kill. Just let me do my thing

I have never received a COVID vaccine and do not intend to.

Yeah, who knows. I'm agoraphobic so I don't go outside at all anyways, would be pointless for me to get it. Plus, I don't wanna put something in my body that I don't fully understand the science behind.

Fair enough, everyone has their own reasons for making these decisions. Not going outside definitely changes things, and I get not wanting to put something in your body without feeling 100% confident about it. Have you ever looked into the science behind it, or is it something you prefer to avoid altogether?

I have seen some and I know a lot of people who have some pretty bad health issues after getting vaccinated. I just can't bring myself to fully trust it.

Do you think more clear info or updates might help, or is it just something you've decided to steer clear of for now?

I've decided that I'm not touching it at all.

No , i only took the previous 3 doses , dont wanna try side effects again

Prepper - December 19, 2024, 12:18 pm

I took the original 2 doses of Pfizer in 2021, no issues.

As for a booster I did not get one and do not have any plans to unless there is a major outbreak again then I will consider it.

TheEagle - December 19, 2024, 3:07 pm

Never had a single vaccine.. Heard a lot of people who took them have had serious sideeffects

Beherit - December 19, 2024, 8:37 pm

Unless it's mandatory by law, then no I will not take it.
