What's one holiday tradition you had growing up that you wish your family or friends still practiced today?

Don't really have any, my family never really had any traditions or anything like that growing up.

Wow, that's kind of surprising.

Has anything changed since childhood for you personally regarding the holiday seasons?

Sometimes I don't even celebrate it, there's that.

we never celebrated halloween, this might not seem too extreme but we never celebrated instead we would pray bc my family was really convinced that halloween is the devils day

When I was a kid yes.. halloween, chirstmas...thanksgiving etc.

However, now we don't do much. The only thing I have to do is buy my nephews and nieces gifts. B-day gifts, eid day gifts.

every year on the night before march 21st, my entire family, cousins aunts uncles included, would meet together and all the adult males would have a sumo wrestling competition, whoever won would be given the honor of planning this years family holiday and the runner up would have to pay for it, it was a great family tradition however it's just me left now, so not as exciting

My family is collecting lumber over the year (the type of lumber that you cant really burn in a furnace since it has some oils in it that would clogg the chimney) to burn it when the summer holidays start. Its done to celebrate/remember our dead family members.

FESTIVUS :D

That was the first thing that came to mind, and it's not even a real thing, I think.

Christmas, Easter, New Year, and those sort of things would be nice. I miss getting an easter egg filled with candy. :-(

Halloween, I really miss going trick or treating, lg when you're an adult you don't really do it anymore lawl
