Russia ready to wage cyber war on UK.

Hacking groups aligned with the Russian state have been responsible for at least nine separate cyber attacks against NATO states, including unprovoked assaults against critical national infrastructure.

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster Pat McFadden said "Cyber war can be destabilising and debilitating" and describe the Kremlin as "exceptionally aggressive and reckless" in this area.

Ffs I just wish this would all end, I don't understand why we can't just all exist(I do from a strategic and resource specific but still) it just seems like such a waste.

Russia is quite aggressive, attacking everything and everyone around them, thinking that it cannot backfire. Just as they attack others, others can attack them in the same way and it will cost them 100 times more. Russia is far from the superpower it once was.

McFadden said "Given the scale of that hostility, my message to members today is clear: no-one should underestimate the Russian cyber threat to Nato."
