What's one lesson or value you believe Christmas teaches that should be carried into the rest of the year?

I would say people are generally more cheereful and happy to be around. I wish people would be as nice to everyone as they are at Christmas all year round

Thats an excellent point indeed.

Be thankful for whatever you get. While most trade gifts with family and friends every year, there are some out there who don't have this luxury.. and maybe can't afford to exchange gifts with their loved ones. My heart goes out to all those people, and wish you better days in your future.

This was very well said.

Thanks. We sometimes get caught up in the holiday spirit.. myself included and forget about the less fortunate. I know what it's like to be in a fucked up position in life financially, as I've been there myself.

Yeah I really feel bad for the people who have nothing and animals in the streets during these cold as hell days and nights.

You find out who's close to you and who reaches out

People that reach you out not always have good intentions ?

That I hate my family when they start talking about politics.

That only your family have your back in bad and good times. So cherish the time you have with them in this life and create memories.

I think the holidays in general teach people to be more generous.

Do you think that value carries on throughout the year?
