Thread: Times Square New Years Eve Ball Drop

Foxy Proxies Ltd - December 26, 2024, 6:23 pm

One of the most famous modern New Year's traditions—the Times Square Ball Drop—began in 1907. The first ball was made of iron and wood and illuminated with 100 25-watt light bulbs.

Anyone here at HF still watch the ball drop whether in person or on tv?

Nope, I don't care about it at all lol. I tend to ignore it

Excited to see if aliens fly out of the ball when it drops this year!

Not really I don't care for it much anymore, but I did go a couple years back in-person. Shit was crazy.

Heck yes... every year on tv. I get to see the ball drop internationally. I always have done this as a kid.

I would get the special drinks. I normally say a prayer to thank god for allowing me live this long and keeping me in good health and in check. I would wish for things to accomplish for the year and ask for gods grace and guidance. I always donate some money to charity every year to keep the evil eyes and curses as bay.

I have people that I know that are jealous type people and they normally say a prayer to curse you. They also would have bad negative thoughts towards you behind your back.

This is a good strategy for the year. I hope to see you continue with this.

I didn't know about this event, I watched something on YouTube and it would be really nice to see it in person.

I've never seen it in person, but is on my bucket list. But I do tend to have it on tv when its live.
