Thread: Cybertruck exploded in front of Trump Tower

Bastille - January 1, 2025, 11:21 pm

Just woke up and saw this news, I'm wondering what do you guy think about it, a Tesla, exploding, in front of the Trump Tower...

I'm not sure if what's in the article has been confirmed or not, I saw articles in French about fireworks, but not the gas canisters.

"Firework mortars and camp fuel canisters were found stuffed into the back of the Tesla Cybertruck that exploded outside President-elect Donald Trump's Las Vegas hotel early Wednesday, killing a suspect inside the vehicle and sparking an intense investigation into possible terrorism."

The explosion doesn't "look like" a battery issue that we've all seen videos on the Internet. We're not experts tho I know

Do you think it's EI ?

Do you think it's related to New Orlean's attack ?

Do you think it's related to democratic people ?

Or maybe just an incident ?

Sounds like 2025 will be something ..

That is insane I don't know who it is but I voted for terrorism just given what is going on currently. It sounds sad but I like many others assumed something was going to happen but I really thought it was going to be a LOT more people.

Unfortunately, yes, and what's surprising is seeing people who advocate for "peace," whether in the camp of Muslims or Democrats, not hesitating to use violence to take down those who don't think like them—something that is literally one of the traits of fascism, the very fascism they accuse Republicans of.

Ironical, isn't it ?

I agree sometimes it feels as people are using these as an excuse or "disguise", and I feel like a broken record repeating this lol but it still rings true WE need to stop as a whole. I sometimes think about how the old saying "Two wrongs don't make a right" and how true it rings over history.

There is so much pain in this world my heart is heavy.

That cyber truck going right where it belongs, in the junk yard lmaooo.

On a serious note, both the New Orleans event and this one were both done by ex US military. A quick Google even says they both served at the same military base at one time. Very interesting. I would not be surprised if they are connected, but I can't find any official statements yet that say they are.

Looks like this cyber car and the car in NOLA were both rented from same company, but no links to ISIS from this Tesla driver.

Looks like it could be a terrorist event with a few similarities between the two:

Quote:Law enforcement sources confirmed to local news outlets that the electric vehicle was rented from Turo, the vehicle-sharing service that was also used in the New Orleans attack on the same day. There, suspect Shamsud-Din Jabbar used the Turo app to rent an electric Ford pickup truck used in that attack in the early hours of New Year's Day, which killed 15 and injured dozens more.

News station Denver 7 cited law enforcement sources on Thursday that Livelsberger and Jabbar had served at the same military base – a possible connection the US army has not independently confirmed to the Guardian. Livelsberger is known to have spent time at the massive North Carolina base of Fort Liberty, formerly known as Fort Bragg, which is home to army special forces command.

However, I do want to mention that multiple cyberstucks have blown up / caught on fire due to incompetent design. It is definitely possible that an innocent person was prepping for a big New Years celebration with fireworks, BBQ, etc and then had a car issue. However, Tesla/Elon Musk say this isn't possible and that all signs were good to go. However, the problem with this is that many of the self combusting cybertrucks have been due to electrical issues, and they're designed where 1 failure can have a ripple effect - possibly preventing the sensors from detecting and/or notifying of any issue.

I think it's probably intentional given the other evidence / similarities to the New Orleans drivethrough event.

If it was a kamikaze attack that is ironic since only the driver died and all anyone else had were minor injuries.

Actually I regret my answer in this poll. I actually don't think it was a random occurrence because the car rental companies were the same and everything. But I don't know what it is. Maybe it was Al-Qaeda wish there was an option for changing my vote in the poll.
