Thread: Musk tells British Monarchy to dismantle Parliament

Elon Musk on Saturday called for Britain's King Charles to dissolve parliament and order a new general election over complaints about the British government's handling of "grooming gangs" a decade ago, marking the Tesla CEO's latest venture into global politics as British officials say Musk has shared "factually inaccurate" claims on social media.

This seems to be yet another example of Musk's tactics:
Point out valid problems
Blame an entire group for the actions of a few
Suggest the entire government should be redone

He has now basically done this in multiple countries, including the USA.

Regardless of what you think about the country, I think we can agree that a multi-billionaire spamming out tweets like this isn't what we all want when we say to drain the swamp. Yes to draining - no to Elon Musk's vision for the world. Regardless though, he sows division, not unity, and then censors alternate opinions while he pretends he champions free speech. It's insulting to general intelligence.

I think that instead of dividing, he's filtering. The UK government has a plan, and this plan involves making British people victims of immigration as a collateral damage, such as what happened with Pakistanis and young white and British girls. They knew, and they didn't tell anything. This is a major problem. Replace "young girls" by "Jews" or "black people", the entire world would denounce that.

We already tried multi-culturalism for around 60 years in France, it didn't work. Now we need to fix this shit, and I definitely think that Elon would be the guy who could do that.

Elon supported far-right wing in Germany (AfD) and the woke and stuff are upset, but this is the only way to fix immigration problem and insecurity.

I don't disagree with many of your points, but I don't know if Elon is truly doing that like you say. Seems to me like he is very pro immigration when it supports businesses, even if citizens voted for more anti immigration policies - at least from what I'm seeing in USA.

Not sure about British politics as much - but isn't the election important to preserve? Is there precedent for redoing a whole general election like Musk is suggesting? I know there are probably problems, but if the government now is the result of legal appointments, elections, etc then it feels like democracy is working & Musk should be helping people run for positions in future rather than asking the King to step in and interfere?
