Quote:According to local media, the incident occurred yesterday morning. The sighting of a UFO detected on radar and its disappearance over a forest triggered a large-scale operation led by Turkish authorities.

An intriguing event mobilized Turkish authorities in an extensive search operation for an unidentified flying object (UFO) that inexplicably disappeared. The phenomenon was recorded in the morning of Tuesday (21) when radar systems detected an unusual object flying over the skies of Kastamonu province.

As the incident unfolded, local authorities monitored the radar for additional information about the mysterious object. However, it suddenly vanished without a trace as it approached a dense forested area near the village of Kirisoglu.

The response involved a coordinated operation by various government institutions, including the Turkish Air Force, Kastamonu Provincial Gendarmerie Command, the Provincial Disaster and Emergency Management Authority (AFAD), the Gendarmerie Search and Rescue (JAK) teams, and commando units. Teams were immediately dispatched to thoroughly search the area.

Although experts are still analyzing the data, the nature of the object remains unknown, heightening the mystery. Eyewitness accounts and official reports have yet to clarify the event.

I've been saying it for months, but the unknown drone fleets & orbs are popping up all over the world.

Keep your eyes open

Soon nobody will deny it. I've never f'n lied to HF about it, but I understand I look like a schizo. I wouldn't jeopardize my own reputation and credibility for something like this if I hadn't seen it firsthand. Not sure what else I can add, it is what it is. I hope people here will be more open minded as more and more countries disclose their own events.

Also this is probably worth saying:

I probably share less than 5% of UFO/UAP news on HF.

Just do some light research and you'll understand the phenomenon a bit better. It's truly widespread.

Prove me wrong.

Haha I wish man

I don't have any equipment for this stuff

I'm considering buying FLIR or thermal or similar gear , or renting for spring when skies clear up a bit more.

Listen I know lately we haven't seen eye to eye on a couple subjects, but I'm going to take some time to reply.

I agree, there definitely seems to be something unusual happening in the skies, and it's possible the government is aware of it but, for our own safety, has chosen not to disclose the details.

I can relate to this, as back in 2020 when I was stationed at Fort Benning, GA for Basic Combat Training, we spent about two weeks out in the field. During our night shooting drills with NVGs, we noticed something strange—hundreds of orbs flying high in the sky.

At the time, we all speculated about what they could be, but most of the guys were younger than me, (I was 24), and none of us thought too much of it. Still, it left us wondering.

You could be onto something, but' well have to wait and see.

I treat every issue separately, I'm glad you responded to this. I compartmentalize a lot and happy to have you here.

Was there any sign of the 5 observables?

With our orbs we've noticed they can fly super fast, stop and change direction with 0 deceleration or acceleration times - just instant stop, instant start, instant directional changes.

The drones I've mentioned haven't displayed that but have other patterns that set them apart from consumer drones & most public military drones.

I can without a doubt say they were not drones, they were able to maneuver if you will at incredible speeds but not super sonic.

They flew in formations, and it was a sight to see for sure. It was crazy but being on a military installation, we thought nothing of it.

Niiiiiiiice, and yeah I think the whole 'drone' definition is wrong. I don't even like saying it but I say it because that's what people call them.

Kind of like how an "LLM" is not technically "artificially intelligent" but we call it AI.

The thing with the word "drone" is that technically a drone should be no larger than around 55LB in weight.

The "drone fleets" we see are made up of "drones" that appear to be larger than SUVs, so they can't even be called drones technically. Aircraft is probably a better name.

I break it down into these names usually in my threads - for reference:

- orbs

- flightmode drones (that can also hover - usually replicating FAA lighting on green/red but sometimes left/right are swapped incorrectly which I have a few videos of). Usually only 1 at a time. I call these one 'gliders' sometimes. They like to hover but usually only higher up in the cloud levels. These could easily be the new T shaped drones out this one private company. Blanking on the name, but that would definitely be plausible.

- blinkers (usually only 1 at a time, higher altitude, further back behind the first 2-4 in the fleet). Blinks red only and is at the cloud level usually but sometimes lower. My theory is this is military, trailing.

- drones - blink red/white usually. Sometimes I am specific about the gliders vs blinkers vs drones, but I often will just group the 3 into "drones" definition, but there are 3 distinct models we've noticed that are also separate from the orbs. I'm not 100% sure on these though. They're the weirdest because they come in high numbers, every night, and the others appear to trail them. But yeah, I don't know. I go back & forth between the 3 "drone models" being part of same fleet and not. All I know is that there are basically 3 primary models, plus the orbs.

I tell people this:

- I am not sure if the drones are with the orbs, or looking for the orbs

- We notice the fleets every night for months. We rarely see orbs anymore but had a ton of sightings in October/November, and few more in December (arguably the best in Dec though)

- The drones can easily be military / government because it's just a fleet of drones performing grid searches with geometric movements. That said, they are huge and can hover for hours, so this would suggest a new battery/energy tech.

- Orbs just straight up ignore gravity & physics. The most exciting and the main reason the drones "bore me". Once you see the orbs the drones are not nearly as exciting. Unfortunately MSM hasn't quite caught up on this part yet.
