Thread: What do you think this is? plasma, UAP, balloon, or what?

Here's a video someone posted of a daylight sighting. It shows what appears to be an object shining brightly, transforming into a more mechanical looking craft. This is in line with my experience, but I haven't seen this specific transformation during the day like this, and the crafts we have seen during the day specifically looked different than this.

Here's a video of ours that shows this, but at nighttime:

There are a lot of people who can corroborate the phenomenon of a bright light transforming into a more traditional flight mode.

I say transform because the lights don't really act like drones, look like them, or sound like them. They of course could be the drone doing something with the lights to shine in all directions. Regardless, these sightings are clearly becoming more common around the world.

Lookup something called mimicry.

This is a leading theory, and it would actually explain a lot of what I've seen.

That video is pretty interesting. I've seen some strange things in the sky myself. It's always intriguing to hear about others' experiences with UFO sightings. Thanks for sharing the links!

Definitely interesting but I think many of us witnesses are not talking enough about it. I'll definitely keep sharing links until there's more widespread understanding.

There are many on HF that doubt it, and some that think I'm schizophrenic. I have an important job in a successful agency in STEM, I've been to two dozen countries and just as many states. I've lived near an airport (diff airports, but airports all the same) basically my whole life.

I know that what I've seen is abnormal and worth sharing. Unfortunately for me, besides maybe half a dozen videos, I have hundreds of clips at this point that just aren't clear enough to prove anything.

I'll share more of my own videos, but some of the clips coming out online are better quality and I can corroborate the behaviors / looks / etc for many of the available videos.
