Well all things take time, especially with all the previous aid given to continue the war.

I hope for peace in all regions and all people. The world needs to come together.

Definitely agreed!

Luckily it's a pretty simple, easy solution.

Russia gives back all lands.
Russia leaves.
Russia builds a DMZ at least 50% on Russian land, and pays for Ukraine's side.
Russia pays reparations.
Russia is sanctioned for years, or possibly decades as a punishment.

I think that's fair to both parties and it would go a long way to enabling true peace in the region: with NATO at the doorstep of RU to make sure they don't think about coming back again in the future (aka: learn from 2014, don't let RU off the hook this time).

Meh, unfortunately it won't happen. We'll go for some sort of anti-peace arrangement that benefits Russia and sets them up to re-invade Ukraine in years from now. It's a shame, but this is the "peace" people seem to want in the world. I want true peace. We didn't give the Nazis what they wanted, and we shouldn't give the Nazis what they want now. Russia should fall to bring morals and values back as a bigger priority.

Russia has suffered heavy casualties in the Ukraine war, but despite the losses, it won't surrender any of the territories it has taken. Historically, much of Ukraine was once part of Russia, and many in Russia see it as their rightful sphere. The real trigger for the invasion was NATO's continued expansion toward Russia's borders, which Moscow saw as a direct threat, leaving it with no choice but to act.

Yeah, I understand what they say.

I view Ukraine as a sovereign nation, unrelated to Russia's desires.

I view the expansion of NATO as occurring in a sovereign nation, unrelated to Russia's desires.

In other words:

I could not give a single fuck that Russia is fearful of the west. They should be.

It's like saying a pedo should be afraid of the lynch mob, or a killer should be afraid of justice. Good. They should be, and it should arrive for them one day in fuller force than it has.

I think NATO should continue to expand and we should leverage the energy crisis to convince more border nations to abandon Putin, in favor of EU / NATO / US / similar deals. I think we should completely isolate RU and make sure that Ukraine is just the first.

Yeah but then this would just lead to absolute nuclear war and the inevitable death of humanity.

Possibly, but that depends on a few things going wrong, and a few people making that decision.

One would hope that Putin would rather lose land than face M.A.D. and one would hope that the Russian people would rather find a new leader than risk it at all. Many things can change in time, especially if we chip away at their economy for years. Like a frog boiling

I don't know what the future holds.

I do know that I do not want a future where Ukraine is Russia, and other "3 day special operations" are launched on neighboring countries.

Where does it stop? I highly doubt RU will stop after Ukraine. They'll likely go for more in Ukraine, and more in other countries too.

Sad times man.

Personally I view Ukraine surrendering as the least peaceful plan.

I see an ongoing war for years as the most peaceful plan.

The reason is because I have 0 faith that RU will not just do it again in the future.

So for me, the continuation of Ukrainian defense is vital to world peace.

I think anything less than that just gives RU permission to keep killing .

In 2022 the Azov Batallion had an estimated 900 members.

According to Donald Trump (and literally everyone else), there are an estimated 800,000 casualties on RU side, and almost as many on the Ukrainian side.

Now, you tell me if you think this is proportional.

Stop eating up the propaganda man. Russians, Ukrainians, and Americans are more alike than they are different:

- because they are all affected by the delusions of a madman (Putin) and the idiots who support him.

The truth is that only one side invaded.

Russia commits more war crimes than we can even remember, on an annual basis.

The true Nazis are the Russians, but it doesn't make sense to call them that. We can call them exactly what they are: Russians. Soon enough they may be considered synonymous!

So yeah, to summarize:

- around 900 alt right soldiers in 2022
- Russia goes on to start a war with around 1.5 Million casualties, punishing thousands of innocent citizens for the sole fact that they are Ukrainian

I think smart people understand who is more Nazi than the other.

Trump inflates numbers for almost every aspect of what he's talking about. Trump has no idea how many casualties there are on the Russian side.

Can we agree that the deaths are in the tens of thousands, and casualties are in the 100s of thousands?

I don't think you have to be at 800K casualties for my last post to make sense. Even if you swap out those numbers for underestimated numbers like 100k casualties, my argument still stands up.

The number of deaths caused by Russia's invasion of Ukraine is far higher than the 900 estimated neo-Nazis in 1 battalion in 1 part of Ukraine in 2022.

RU's invasion is not proportional to the problem, nor is it legal or justified.

You can go look at every other source too and 800,000 casualties on RU side is around where everyone agrees.

Now, that doesn't mean DEAD. It's just casualties.

Someone can get shot in the leg, become a 'casualty number' and then go back to war next week.

The problem I have with pro-RU people is that they just say "fake news" , fully knowing that every source is saying it's closer to Trump's numbers than they are to 0.

There isn't a counter-argument it seems.

You and others have never said, "well here is the proof that only 400K got injured" or "here is the proof that only 40,000 died"

It's always just 'that's fake news'.

Anyways, I only bring this up because I see it like this:

- Russians aren't privy to the real numbers. If they were I doubt they'd support the war.
- Sharing info like I do on HF can help Russians or Russia supporters come closer to the truth
- The more evidence & more truth, the better.
- We can't expect the average Russian citizen or its supporters to make a rational decision without real data.
- So I share news / data in an effort to hopefully achieve peace, through truth.

Western media touting Trump's numbers does not make it a fact. Now tell me, who is a better expert, who has been doing it longer, and in almost every country in the world? Who has done more color revolutions around the world than any other country? Who has their nose stuck up so far every other countries ass than any other country in the world? If you can't guess who is the world's propaganda king, then you need to go back to school. Look at what the U.S. did to Libya: Libya had the most advanced country in Africa, an excellent economy, and they were about to switch to a gold backed currency and leave the petro dollar in the dust. What happened? NATO came in (at the direction of the U.S.) and bombed that country back to the stoneage, manufactured a crises that still exists to this day. And then killed Gaddafi because he did like Trump is trying to do today: put his country and their needs first. Even now we see evidence of extra-judicial activity around the world from the U.S.: flat out stealing Syrian oil, they incited the Maidan color revolution in Ukraine that put the ultra-nationalists and nazis into power, overthrew the legitimate president of Ukraine and replaced him with western puppets to prepare to attack Russia via proxy, yet you have the balls to say Russia started this. Russia did not start this, but they will surely finish it. After more than 2 years of fighting, Ukraine has lost nearly everything they had. And they won't get it back either. Putin is no idiot and he knows already not to trust any document signed by an American president. And Trump doesn't have the power to stop the war either. No matter what bullshit he says to the media. Russia is not interested in freezing the front line. And Trump cannot and will not, get Ukraine's 5 regions back. Those are long gone and Trump cannot do anything about it. While I acknowledge there are casualties on both sides, it is very clear that Ukraine is not the winner in this war.

I was saying the same things a year ago, and year before that, and in first few months of invasion too.

Nothing I'm saying is actually related to Donald Trump for the numbers. He quoted other findings from credible sources anyways.

I think there are a number of impartial sources analyzing the war.

I'd like to mention what i said earlier though, again:

- It seems that anytime a RU supporter comes across casualty/death numbers, all they say is "fake news"
- They never appear to have any counter-argument, or data to back their claims up.

I bring this up because yet again I feel like this is happening.

It's just more "that's fake news" with no follow-up data from your side.

Is there any data that supports a successful invasion from RU?

All signs point to a catastrophic failure from RU, and the only path forward appears to be a truce, or a war of attrition.

Or in other words, there is no winner here, just two losing sides who have lost way too many people for what's essentially a civil/social disagreement.

How much did it cost?

How many casualties?

Have you looked at the % square kilometers rate per year for last two years? It's less than 2% gained. Ukraine held the line, it's a war of attrition and Russia is not "winning", it's slowly killing thousands for barely any new territory by sq KM %.

Ukraine made great ground in Kursk in the newest offensive this week, and it's ongoing. There are so many refineries on fire in Russia every other week with new strikes, and lots going on.

You should re-research, Trump is eying rare earth minerals in Canada, Ukraine, and all over. He could definitely end up giving Ukraine more than Biden ever did in return for land rights, and if we do that then prepare to see this end very very quickly.

The only reason Russia is even in Ukraine still is because the USA hasn't given Ukraine the tools we could easily give them.

Anyone who doesn't get that is lying to themselves. Im not saying you personally Foxy believe that, but I do think you ought to give my post here some thought. The best part about destroying Russia's forces in Ukraine and helping defend is that we could do it so easily with them weakening week by week, AND it would be morally and ethically right to do so. History shall treat Russia as an expansionist dictatorship that committed hundreds of war crimes, and I truly hope Ukraine and the USA can unite to end Russias invasion by killing every fucking RU soul in Ukraine. Maybe they can get a due date so at least they can leave first, but this would be the best way to keep peace.
