You make a channel when you make your account.

You are going to have to get a "Niche" to start. Pick something and stick with it. Any ideas on what you want to do? Also do you have the equipment to start? such as decent mic, camera, compy....

Well firstly you need to be sure that your niche fits for affiliate marketing as you want to sell products also and not depends only on youtube partnership as you need thousand of views to make some bucks daily

Also you want to choose a niche where you have some interest ,or you want to learn .Even if you choose the best niche but you dont have any interest in it you will quit soon

In the past i use forums as promotions and i choose diabetic niche ,the niche was great but i dont know too much about it and struggle to create content ,answer questions etc so i quit

Consistent content, engaging with viewers, and promoting your channel on social media can help grow your YouTube channel! Good luck!
