Unlock it with iCloud, yes. I know of one 'service' on Telegram that was shutdown for running a phishing scam to extract credentials from the devices' owners.

Somebody needs to know the iCloud login for these services to obtain it. You can certainly operate a service where you direct people to Apple's two-week password reset process if they don't go there first.

I mean this is considering these people can contact the owner of the device or hope they remember the details....my qquestion is for situations where the owner of the device isnt even an option as they could have been the one that sold the icloud locked device lol

If the owner of the account isn't available at all, there's only one option: a recycling bin. Even the most advanced (and restricted) forensics tools would have limited success at unlocking iPhones and iPads in such state. You would be forgiven for thinking that it was possible because of the rampant scams online. Please don't do that.
