Thread: Biden Administration forging documents using autopen signatures! Pardons are VOID.

jcole - March 17, 2025, 6:52 pm

There is a full scale investigation that has found that Joe Biden did not sign any documents in his presidency. Who was signing these documents? Investigators found that the autopen has been used repetitively. Each signature reviewed on documents investigated were identical, and no two signatures are identical.

"The Merriam-Webster dictionary defines an autopen as 'a device that mechanically reproduces a person's signature'."

"In the final minutes of his presidency, Joe Biden pre-emptively pardoned several family members, including his brothers James and Frank Biden, and sister Valerie Biden Owens." Others also pardoned are "Dr. Anthony Fauci, retired Gen. Mark Milley and members of the House committee that investigated the Jan. 6 attack on the Capitol".

Trump posted on Truth that the pardons issued by the Biden Administration are "void, vacant and of no further force and effect".

Dr. Anthony Fauci needs to be investigated and prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. He is supposedly responsible for the Covid virus, but it has not been proven. He has done work on Gain-of-function research.

Here's a video of him talking about a 'surprise outbreak' coming days before Trump's inauguration in his first term.

"During a forum on pandemic preparedness at Georgetown University, Fauci said the Trump administration will not only be challenged by ongoing global health threats such as influenza and HIV, but also a surprise disease outbreak."

Whilst I'm sure auto pen or items such as Docusign don't actually mean your signing a form, I wonder the affects it will have on Americans from now, and possibly worldwide. I mean, I've signed job contracts, car contracts ect ect using these tools - I'm assuming the next twelve months will have interesting developments sorrounding contracts and auto pen

Tha Sneak - March 17, 2025, 9:32 pm

There's a lot of bills that Biden signed with Autopen too I'm interested to see how this turns out. I guarantee it will set a precedent from here forward.

Epic - March 18, 2025, 5:45 am

Barack Obama, JFK, and Thomas Jefferson were all known to use autopen, not really something new.

Trump also claimed that Joe Biden "didn't know anything about the the pardons". Which simply can't be true. The constitution doesn't address pardon methodology, but regardless, Trump alone can't legally reverse Bidens pardons.

Trump can throw twitter tantrums all he wants and say that the pardons are void, but whether that is true or not, would but up to the legal system to decide.

I think the only thing I really took notice of was that the pardons were signed as written in the city of Washington, but Biden was out golfing in the US Virgin islands at the time. Do you think something like that stipulation would matter whether or not the POTUS is present at the signing? I do agree that other POTUS's have used autopen as it is more than likely a really convenient way to get the ball rolling on matters.

Il'l e honest I'm not really familiar with the law on these kinds of things. I don't see a problem with things as long as Biden officially "authorized" the signature, but I will say I dont think they should have "lied" about the location (City of Washington).

I think we'll know more in the future once there is more information about an investigation. Although I'm a Trump supporter.. I don't think he can actually reverse the pardons granted by himself. He will need help from Judges.

I love this! Everyone thinks that the democratic administration is the compassionate party standing up for gay rights, women's rights, tampons in boys bathrooms, etc. When in reality they are the biggest fucking crooks and are a literal corrupt mob who hide behind (let's make the environment cleaner and tax everyone! ?) I'm never was a big fan of politics because of all the bullshit artists, and people getting wound up over nonsense, but these recent events are so fucking entertaining to watch and is better than any TV show because it's real life. All these woke scumbags are going to get destroyed! Living in New York I was so tired of hearing about all this stupid retarded woke shit when trying to have a nice time and play pool. And every bank has a gay guy which is fine, nothing against gays, but they are often the highly dysfunctional ones that get all flustered when they have to do something complicated and I see the other staff members all the time getting frustrated having to babysit them. NOT BECAUSE they're gay but because equal opportunity laws force these poor businesses to hire people that are fucked up. I have gay friends and have nothing against them, but why is it that nobody gets hired for their skill sets and by performance.

I went to get a job at Bestbuy a few years back when times were tough and the managers seemed like they were so fucking happy to hire me and treated me like gold and something felt odd with how desperate they were for me to work there. I asked over the phone, is my pay going to reflect my knowledge and skill? The manager acted like I said something bad about her daughter or something and said "EVERYBODY STARTS AT THE SAME STARTING PAY" and I can tell that question took the wind out of her. I then respectfully declined via text after telling her let me think about it, and she never responded to my follow up email or text haha. Fuck the world man, really hope things get better with new administration!

Edit: I also wanted to say, almost nothing in your reply is related to the original thread topic. It reads mostly as political-emotional train of thought.

Why would you be entitled to higher pay before even starting the job? Best buy is a customer service job, not exactly a premier tech job where skills dictate salary. I find it odd people seem entitled to things before having earned them.

The DEI argument is such noise. Companies are, for the most part, allowed to hire and fire as they please. Half the country are right to work states. If you aren't performing, odds are you'll end up getting fired. I guess with federal and state agencies it may be different, but only a small fraction of the country works those jobs. People have weaponized the term DEI, a wash of the word discriminate. They forget it also includes A for accessibility (DEIA). People also forget DEIA protects ALL workers, but is focused on discrimination based on identity or disability, seems reasonable to me.

You say "NOT BECAUSE they're gay but because equal opportunity laws force these poor businesses to hire people that are fucked up". So why did the bank hire an employee that wasn't capable? If there are smart, capable gay people (there are), why weren't they hired? Seems like the banks problem.

I did go off a rant there and get off topic haha. And yea Best Buy is just a discount electronics store where the products mostly sell themselves and they got all the info you need on the website anyway haha.

If Biden authorized it then it is 100% legal, however if he did not authorize the signing of certain bills and autopen was used then that is a major issue.

Trump himself used Autopen.

Also the idea that Biden did not sign any documents during his Presidency is laughable considering there is literally many videos on him signing documents, orders, etc it takes a 10 second google search to find.

If the document stated it was signed in the city of Washington does that mean that the document is still within legal standing if the ex-POTUS was not in the country? I'm curious to know how someone would be able to prove that Joe Biden wasn't aware of something though.

Yes it is legal, Obama did it before too while out of the USA.

Until there is a constitutional amendment or the supreme court rules otherwise Presidents can do this.

But it must be authorized by the President, if any document was signed with autopen that a President did not authorize then that is a major issue that needs a thorough investigation and there needs to be legal consequences for it.

But then you have the issue as you mentioned it has to be proven that the President was unaware of it and with the amount of documents Presidents sign even with autopen it would likely be very unrealistic to expect any President to remember every bill, when/where he authorized autopen, etc.

The closest we can come to is Speaker Johnson's story but that is not proven.

I don't think anything is going to come out of this. More than likely a lot of litigation that is prolonged, but no actual definitive ruling that coincides with the Republican party. Just another long drawn out battle ending in a stalemate.

Well, I know how most of you hate fact checking sites and the MSM, but they're all claiming that Legal experts say that there is nothing in US law which would invalidate pardons signed by autopen.

And they also claim apparently that even JFK used some kind of 1960s mechanical autopen.

While it is not a pardon, or a death sentence commuted to life without parole (just maintaining the same anti-misinformation attitude), Joe Biden did commute a convicted FBI agent(2) killers double life sentence to home confinement. How will it lead to serious problems? it is perfectly legal if Biden authorized it. Trump himself used autopen before just as previous Presidents have.

There is no supreme court ruling and no constitutional amendment that prohibits the use of autopen.

As for Trump's claim that for example Biden's pardons are void... no they are not Trump cannot void them.

Yes. Correct. I think that one was about the guy being 80 and appealing for that based on age and illness. There were cop killers given life sentences by Biden rather than death penalty as well. Don't think I'm rigorously defending this stuff lol I'm not it's kind of meh. Last two presidents have both have made some dubious decisions with those powers.

I actually wish at this point YouTube and Google News and Microsoft Edge would stop showing me so much damn American politics, when I've unsubscribed from it all and wanting other content, and even when I search up other content it's still trying to show me American politics and I'm having to actively search for what's going on in the country I'm living in as my algorithms aren't even interested in showing it to me.

Because my parents are American and I'm an American citizen, and I was born there and I lived there as a child some, and my entire extended family, minus spouse related family is American. And I can trace my ancestry in the USA back to the Mayflower on my mother's mother's side. Is that enough reason for you? Oh, also my American parents pretty much got together because of their passion for discussing US politics.

Oh, those also that thing where the US affects the whole rest of the world. Currently politicians here keep doing Trump light and talking about getting rid of DEI when there's nothing here actually CALLED DEI which is a bit cringe. I mean it's cringe they're using the US name when it isn't even called that here.

Was he ever in Wuhan himself? One "conspiracy" that I did always believe from the beginning is that it defo came out of that lab one way or another. It doesn't HAVE to be for a political or financial gain reason though. Any random psychopath could also do it on purpose just for a power buzz. Not saying that's what happened but it's one of the possibilities.

Quote:Fauci had been informed by January 2020 that his institute had funded the discovery and study of dozens of novel coronaviruses at the Wuhan Institute of Virology, including the closest cousin virus to SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19, new records show.

I'm not incredibly informed about this topic to come to that conclusion. I would assume he was not the scientist in the lab creating the virus with a test tube in hand. I would also assume that he'll never get in trouble for any research he's ever done. As much transparency as I like to expect from even the Trump administration, nothing will happen. Nothing really ever does happen. Big name people do bad things, and never feel the repercussions of their actions.

There could possibly be a probe from AG Bondi about some of this stuff, but as of right now haven't heard anything more.

The Pact - March 22, 2025, 8:38 pm

It could have been an accident but it also could have been a random very evil person in the lab who wanted to be a special type of "mass murderer," look how many people want to be serial killers and mass murderers for a power buzz out there. One rouge scientist with those inclinations at any time can do so much damage. I know that's slightly off topic to what responsibility Anthony Fauci may or may not have had paying for the research, but it's still part of the picture/puzzle.

I also tend to be a bit skeptical because people fail to mention that this research was supposed to be being conducted to HELP people gain knowledge about illness and that all gets dismissed because so many people are SO butthurt about masks, mandated vaccines and lockdowns that it severely clouds the whole issue.

HOWEVER I am not closed minded to any of this stuff. I was a bit during the actual Covid era because I had relatives who died at the beginning of the pandemic in New York and one was a close one who wasn't elderly.

But while I was initially hurt that my son wasted so much money travelling the country with his friends going to the protests against the Covid restrictions there came a time later where MY MIND CHANGED and I decided that we actually may well have needed some people taking a stand against the extremes of those Covid restrictions. We probably did need a few people to push back.

Have you considered that the people driving those restrictions are the people you fight for on Hackforums? There's a lot of topics to get hot about today..

Remember, I'm asking you if you've Considered the possibility.

You laid out a framework for how you process these things, so I'm interested if you first take a full look at a topic, or start at 1 point and work through it overtime. What you said seems to suggest a time-factor.

If the answer is yes, could it be possible that some things you feel very adamantly about today, you may not feel as adamantly about them tomorrow? Perhaps even find yourself on the opposite aisle?

I have found that if I feel very strongly about something, I must also take a look at additional perspectives before I can consider a position.

Even during Covid when I was upset about my first cousins death from Covid I did still listen to many people who were anti the public health measures, and I read their links and watched the Bitchute and Rumble videos they sent me. But I felt a lot of what they were showing me was biased because people were so butthurt about masks, lockdowns and mandates that they were so eager to believe any alternative stuff. However, I never believed the stuff about the BATS because it just seemed too obvious that it came from the fucking Wuhan Lab full of coronaviruses that was in Wuhan. ?

USA? Re my posting a thread about Americans losing their jobs. And I don't think making a thread about that is "fighting for these people". It's not my problem if American government workers are losing their jobs in high numbers. I'm kind of surprised so many Americans think that's cool, but all the talk about "waste and fraud," is to me clear as day probably mostly bullshit when they're just being replaced with Grok. ?

And they're stopping mountains of charitable aid for the same reasons to lower the burden on those on the top tax rate and lower corporate taxes too . But the medicine to stop babies getting AIDS was cut. Am I ever going to say "Actually I think that's fine and dandy? No, never.

What mostly irritates me is the lack of logic from people swallowing every bit of justifying propaganda that's being thrown on the internet right now for all this stuff without even questioning it, which I feel is all I'm doing.

I tried to re-iterate about the considered part to avoid another book from this guy like the other thread but obviously everything is offensive to these people. They are so oddly defense and self-concious, yet incredibly unself-aware.

Pact, let me know if you figure out the answer to the first question you asked and maybe I'll read all of that later. Not everything requires a book, nor does it require some elaborated deflection. You don't need to pack so much information into one simple response to a post, that it becomes a completely different thing. I mean you're clearly baiting something because you think I'm baiting you. The Joker - April 21, 2025, 2:24 am

This is quite an interesting topic, and it seems to be mixing some real issues with potential conspiracy theories, so it's important to consider the sources carefully when discussing claims like these.

The use of autopen devices is not new. It has been used by various U.S. Presidents, including previous administrations, to expedite the signing of documents, especially when the President is dealing with a heavy workload or is traveling. It's also used for mundane tasks that don't require personal attention, such as administrative documents. Autopens reproduce a person's signature mechanically, and while they can look identical, it's important to note that such signatures are not "forged" in a criminal sense, but rather part of the administrative process.

That said, it's not entirely unusual for there to be concerns or questions about the use of an autopen, especially when it comes to important documents or executive orders. If there's an ongoing investigation, it would be interesting to see what conclusions are drawn and whether any regulations around the use of autopen devices are being reconsidered.

As for the pardons, it's important to clarify that the president does have the constitutional right to issue pardons, but there's always room for debate on how those decisions are made, especially in the case of preemptive pardons for family members or political figures. Legal challenges to such decisions could arise, and people have their own opinions about the fairness or timing of these actions.

What are your thoughts on this? Do you think the use of the autopen is a legitimate concern, or just part of the process?
