Would you rather spend the night in the Amazon rainforest or the middle of the Atlantic ocean. Also give reasons.

Most definitely the Amazon rainforest 100%. Maybe hang out with some of the Amazonian tribes and attend an Ayahuasca ceremony Edit: reason: I love the nature and would also love to do some herping and find cool spiders and other critters.

Amazon rainforest. Stable ground and a ton of resources. I will probably get eaten within the week though.

With a 24 hour MRE and plenty of drinking water i would be fine doing either. But If i was in one of those covered inflatable survival boats id be fine in the ocean.

Really depends on what we're looking at in terms of the ocean. Are we talking treading water for an entire night cycle? If so, definitely the rainforest lol.

The Amazon rainforest, without a doubt. It wouldn't be too hard—as long as you watch out for bugs and poisonous frogs, which are everywhere. But even that isn't too difficult. The more colorful the little frog is, the more dangerous and poisonous it tends to be, and they're usually pretty easy to spot.

Oof, tough call. But if I had to choose—I'd go with the Amazon rainforest. Here's why:

Solid ground > open water. At least in the rainforest, you can find shelter, start a fire, and maybe even find food. In the ocean, you're just... floating. Or treading water. Or sitting in a tiny boat, completely exposed.

Predators vs. drowning. Sure, the Amazon has jaguars, snakes, spiders, and all sorts of things that want to make you their midnight snack. But at least you can try to defend yourself. In the Atlantic, it's just you, the water, and the creeping existential horror of something brushing your leg at 3 a.m.

Chance of survival. In the Amazon, people do survive. It's brutal, but not hopeless. Middle of the Atlantic with no ship? Unless you're on a raft with Wilson, odds are slim.

I'd definitely prefer to be in the amazon rainforest over in the middle of the ocean. There's lots of things to build from, shelter, food.. etc
