OK - Cool. I will relay the offer to one my clients that I know likes these type of usernames. Before I do this, can you explain what happened with that dispute where the user is saying your charged back on PayPal after the exchange? He provided a screenshot to backup his claim. While that's not related to this, it makes me weary on whether it's safe to conduct business with you.. if my client is interested in the username, I would hate for there be any issues later down the line. If you have a valid reason for what happened, would be open to hearing it.

I can assure you there will be no issues, for what you're referring to I never received the bitcoins in exchange, I waited a day, panicked and charged back. I also am comfortable with using any escrow service.

I'm not really worried about you not giving the username at the time of the sale, I'm more concerned about after the sale. It's not unheard of people selling usernames, and then use different tactics to get account back at a later date. If anything like that that was to happen, it's going to fall on me.

I've sent an email to the client, to see if they're interested in the username. If they are, I will reach out to you via PM, and we can finish discussing these concerns. Kindly answer me this, is the price negotiable.. or you're firm at $650?

When sold it will come with original everything with no pass keys attached, I am slightly flexible on the price.
