Thread: Anyone Know a Site to Buy Crypto with Credit Card \(Minimal KYC\)

Austerity - May 31, 2025, 6:33 pm

Hey guys,

I'm trying to help my cousin overseas who gave me permission to use their credit card to buy crypto, but they won't be available to go through full KYC or ID verification while traveling.

I'm looking for platforms or exchanges that:

? Accept credit cards

? Allow buying crypto (USDT, ETH, BTC, etc.)

? Require minimal verification (or ideally no selfie/photo ID)

? Do not ask for a bank statement or physical confirmation

? We're not looking to do anything shady — just trying to keep it simple while they're away and can't submit docs.

Does anyone know any trusted sites or P2P platforms that could work for this?

Appreciate any leads ?

Unfortunately, I do not have a website for you to use. But this sounds hella shady brother.

What would you consider minimal verification? I'd assume that if someone is traveling they'd have their documents with them, and requesting a bank statement can often easily be done via the bank's app. Some more info regarding this aswell as wanted amounts would probably be helpful for suggestions.

Depending on the amount, giftcards for various services such as Nintendo, Xbox and Amazon can be bought online and then sold on p2p sites like Noones (non-KYC depending on the country and amount) or on giftcard swap subreddits, expect to get around 70-80% of the giftcards value in crypto. He'd probably fetch more for it if he could buy the giftcards physically in store.

Is a credit card the only way he can pay? Crypto ATMs are prevalent in a lot of countries, he could potentially withdraw cash from the cc and use one of those, the fees vary but are a bit better than what you'd get with giftcards.

This made me remember that Moonshot, a fairly popular but new exchange Tweeted a while ago that they accept Apple Pay with no-KYC for up to $500 a week, take this with an extreme heavy grain of salt though. I never used the exchange myself and I find the wording in the Tweet to be fairly vague, as they are using Coinbase for it:

Why not just buy small amounts of crypto? Thats the only way really to get around the requirement.

Here's a list;
$150 or less - Changelly.
700 or less - changehero

I know a service payment provider, no kyc. You make a merchant account create invoices, get paid and withdraw in crypto. fees are high but no kyc

I've just discovered changenow let's you buy with card. They have Google pay as I payment option. I think I'll give them a go although I'd be trying with visa prepaid so most likely fail

I use binance P2P and always work good for me

Were you able to buy from any of these mentioned? If so, did you have to at least confirm the billing address? What do you say about the location?... since you are not at the address location of your cousin's cc, does it allow you to buy?

you can buy from pump fun directly using Apple Pay!

Be careful with Changenow. They are shady. A ton of their crypto is considered "high risk". So if you ever put it into a KYC exchange, you risk account loss.

Also, their customer service is atrocious. These guys are morons who don't know what they are doing.

Just be really careful about them.

Have you tried SimpleSwap? I heard some users saying good things about them.
