Thread: New attempted kidnapping in France of a person involved in cryptocurrency

Bastille - June 1, 2025, 6:23 am

This is the 4th time this has happened in France since the beginning of the year. I've already made two threads on this topic :

The justice system isn't doing its job, it's too lenient — they aren't afraid of anything. It's also a good reminder that it's important to keep this kind of thing private and not expose yourself on social media.

I didn't find any video in english, but you can enable the subtitles :

These stories and happenings are getting crazier and crazier, I just don't see how kidnapping someone involved in crypto is going to end well whatsoever.

Unless you genuinely managed to do a movie-style most super undercover kidnapping. I don't see how you're going to get away with it.

If you're kidnapping someone to get access to their crypto or devices, well... they'll have those devices on them. Tracking will most definitely get them caught. On top of that, vehicles, any sort of object etc is going to be caught in surveillance. I just genuinely think these people lack the ability to think things through.
