Thread: any beginners wanna study together?

huoshi1 - July 8, 2025, 11:36 am

Hello everyone,

I'm currently starting my journey into cybersecurity and ethical hacking. I'm focusing on foundational tools like nmap, ncat,..., learning terminals, network basics, python, ect ect and gradually building practical skills through labs on platforms like TryHackMe and Root-Me.

To keep my learning organized, I have created a Notion page where I document everything: detailed notes, step-by-step explanations, and a reading list of about 15 key books and resources that I'm working through to deepen my understanding.

I'm looking for a fellow beginner or someone at a similar level who is motivated to learn together, share knowledge, discuss challenges, and stay accountable. We can work through labs, exchange tips, and even do voice sessions to talk through concepts or troubleshoot.

If you're serious about learning and want to build solid foundations rather than just copy-pasting commands, we'd be a good match.

Feel free to reply here or send me a PM if you want to team up and start progressing together.

Thanks and good luck to everyone on their cybersecurity journey!

I wana what are you studying first

liminghang - July 11, 2025, 12:55 pm

I am a novice and I want to learn hacking techniques. Can I make progress with you? How can I contact you? Is there any telegram contact information?

Let's try to create a group on Teligram. every one a little talk about his favorite programming language and so we can study and grow together?! I like SQLinjection, python, go. but from what I read in several chats many say that JavaScript is better than it can do many things, it is above all the thing that interests many of us beginners, I guess you know what I am referring to! anyway count me

I'm new to cyber security as well, and seem to be around the same skill level as you.

I'm very interested in learning more with you.

?Hello, I am new here and I would love to grow with people at my beginner level, I think it would be good to create a group somewhere that would connect us.
