Thread: 17yo Looking to Launch a Token Need General Advice & Tips!

socialnode - July 26, 2025, 3:30 pm

Hey HackForums,

I'm 17 and want to launch my own crypto token. I don't have a name, use case, or blockchain picked yet—I'm just exploring the idea and looking for general advice from people who've done this before.

What I Need Help With

- Where to start? (Learning Solidity, choosing a blockchain, etc.)
- Common mistakes to avoid (scams, bad tokenomics, legal issues)
- How to build hype (without being a scam)
- Best free/cheap tools for deployment, marketing, etc.
- Realistic expectations (chances of success, costs, time needed)

What I Know So Far

- I know a little bit solidity (the very basics)
- I don't have a big budget, so I need low-cost strategies.
- I'm not looking for a team rn

Why Post Here?

I've seen a lot of crypto threads on HF, and some of you have real experience. I'm not asking for handouts—just tips, warnings, and guidance from people who've been through this.

If you've launched a token (successful or not), what would you do differently?

Drop your thoughts below—any advice helps, thanks a lot!

(No scams, no "DM me for free money" replies—just real talk.)

Are you looking to rug pull and get rich? You have no use-case or name. So why then do you want to even do this? It just seems like you don't have the experience or expertise to pull this off.

As Omniscient said you have no use-case or name yet. Study the successful tokens and see what made them successful.

Also study the failures too. Then learn marketing and if you have the right budget anything is possible.

What makes your crypto special?

Why should people buy it instead of others? BTC is king, what makes your project unique?

Once you answer these questions and show the market, the possibilities are endless.

Maybe next time you should tell this forum you age 3 times instead of just 2. Maybe get better results that way.
