Thread: Flipper Zero v rolling code fobs

Test17Yellow - July 29, 2025, 12:47 am

So apparently there's a new firmware available for The Flipper Zero on the dark web that can unlock cars that have rolling code fobs.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=wk7BGMkul8A>

Anyone know where this firmware can be found? For research purposes only, of course.

DeathPenalty666 - July 29, 2025, 2:07 am seriously this was new like 2 year ago, people just didn't talk about it so me. I remember the guy shared how he was using to break in using the flipper and a little modile of the size of a beer bottle cap. THE THINGS IS!! you will have one code to work, you can manage to have another one not used after that if you dont cme back to the fob key you will be locked out. IF this happen you are f%?k because the flipper can work around the rolling key system but there is a chance it don't gnerate the code needed. I hear and seen many people messing theey fob, got locked out with the keys inside(YES IT CAN HAPPEN IF YOU MESS WITH IT) and then you are good to call a locksmith haha. There is specially crafted app for the keys system, they never shared more than the app and the app to work.

Don't be idiot guys, if you do this kiing of things keep your fob on you or somewhere you can take it back, apparently when you are locked out at 4am at -30degree the hype take another turn ;) . Also you can literally mess your fob or the system of the car. The result will cost you a more than a thousand buck, require to reconfig the unit IF IT CAN and the keys.

You would unsync your own car key, i wouldn't recommend it as reprogramming it would need special equipment or in most cases a call to a locksmith this would probably cost you multiple hundreds op dollars depending on where your located.

Futhermore, you would only be able to lock/unlock the car with 1 signal as the control unit expects a new code (rolling code).

You could try this on a old car (pre 2000) some of them don't have rolling codes.

Good luck on your journey.

So you've tried this all, or is your reply simple conjecture?

This is basic knowledge, start doing some research on your topic before simply asking on the forum.

You can even ask ChatGPT, if you're lazy which i do expect since you didn't research shit.

Or have you researched the topic before starting the thread or is it just simple conjecture?

Anyways, good luck script kiddie.

I managed to get a copy of the firmware after a hint from another member here and a subsequent search on Dread.

And guess what? It works, not universally but on at least on some vehicles - including two 2024 $50k+ Japanese vehicles and a surprising number of Korean cars.

But thanks for your input.
