Thread: A help for SQL SQLMAP

passerino - August 5, 2025, 5:04 pm

hi everyone

a beginner question is it possible for a site to contain a DBS from another site? I'm scanning a site for the sale of clothes and shoes, and inside there is a DBS not only IT?! I was able to find the administrator's name and password and was able to log in as Admin. in the site dashboard, there are these options dashBOARD-Warehouse-Site Management - shipping-mailing.

1- the problem that when I try to visit the BULLETIN BOARD you ask me for the password!? I tried with the passwordin here I logged in and at the dashwide it tells me wrong password!!

2- My problem is that when I download all the data like payments in PayPal and user id I get blank data, How can I recover my payment details and password without being locked out for SQLMAP injection??

3- when I visit the new ones written in the site I see the SQL attacks.

Any suggestion will be appreciated thanks

A bulletin board on a subdomain will be a separate platform and database.

you're right bro. I noticed that 8 sites are connected. Why do you think the password is on the bulletin board?

Hi bro! Can you share target link here so that we can discuss in more detail?

Bulletin Board Password: It likely uses separate credentials or session handling. Check for hidden forms, network requests, or submodules requiring direct auth.

Blank Data (e.g., PayPal): The admin role may be restricted, or the data may be filtered by server-side permissions. Use Burp to inspect API calls and replay them with sqlmap only if explicitly authorized.

Visible SQL Attacks: These may be from other testers or bots. Log and test inputs safely using parameterized tools.

by chance you are an administrator or staff of the site!?

How can you find bait? I can run sqlmap and can do all of these fancy tools (including nmap) yet the sites I find are either extremely shit or not vulnerable. I guess key is Google dorking the entire day of the day

You are in wrong direction.

What is the direction then? I forgot to mention I also run Shodan and sometimes Censys scans. Cannot always rely on G00gl3.
