Thread: Don't bother reading this unless you develop malware or are good at hacking :\)

Not here to waste anyone's time!

I'm a PhD student researcher studying the judgement and thought processes of people who write malware or are skilled black hat (or grey hat) hackers — not how they do it technically, but how they think about what they do.

If you've ever thought, 'You have to live it to understand it' — you're right. I'm conducting this study because I'm genuinely interested in how people who are so technically skilled think and feel about being involved in this world. Considering how much time it takes to become so proficient, are there any negative feelings about using the skills for these activities?

If you've developed malware, crypters, loaders, bots, whatever, or have dabbled in black hat hacking (even if this is something you've only done once or twice in the past and no longer do)— this anonymous survey is for you. No IP logging, no tracking, hosted on an .onion site, takes about 10 minutes.

If you want to be part of something anonymous and non-judgmental — the survey isn't about outing people, but understanding thought processes.

Questions? Feel free to ask.

Thanks!

If the results are to be public, I would love to have a read at them. Good with the survey analysis.

The results (all anonymous) will be published in my thesis once I complete it and accessible online :)
