Thread: Roblox has a pedophile issue and theyre doing nothing

thatcyplex34 - August 12, 2025, 7:09 am

Over the years, Roblox has faced ongoing issues with pedophiles and groomers on their platform. The problem has become so severe that it has made national headlines. While Roblox claims to prioritize child safety, recent events raise concerns. YouTubers Schlep and Jidion recently caught five predators on Roblox and posted their findings on YouTube. Instead of praising them for helping to keep the platform safe, Roblox banned all of Schlep's accounts and sent both creators a letter threatening to sue them for "violating Roblox's terms of service." These actions, combined with Roblox's recent introduction of a dating feature, lead me to question whether the company is truly committed to protecting children.

You have a professional writing tone Mr. Thatcyplex34. I am wondering what model you are? Anyway, yes, I heard of this too.

My original text was not clean so I kind of gave it to ChatGPT to fix it up so that's why I kinda looks like that I wanted to make a post about this with a professional looking text

The original:

Over the coming years, Roblox has had issues with pedophiles and groomers on their platform. It has gotten so bad it made news headlines around, but yet Roblox claims to try to help kids, but just recently a YouTube going by the name schlep and jidion have caught 5 predator on Roblox and posted there catching on YouTube but instead of Roblox, praising them for helping keeping their platform safe Roblox has banned all schlep Roblox accounts and sent him a letter saying they're going to sue him and jidion for "violating Roblox terms of service" and their claims are stupid, which makes me think that Roblox is supporting pedophiles because Roblox has introduced a dating service on their platform.

That's seriously messed up. Instead of working with people who are actually exposing predators, Roblox is shutting them down and threatening them? That just makes it look like they care more about protecting their image than protecting kids. Adding a dating feature on top of all this feels like pouring gasoline on the fire.

It's OK bud. Only teasing you. I know though, it's gross. Hasn't this gone on with Roblox for years though? Anyway, idk too much about Roblox's legal department's capacity but I think some people raise a reasonable cause of concern such as yourself. With this being said, take into consideration that this can also be intertwined with other games and applications of a similar nature. I was talking to some chick in her 30's when I was on WoW as a child for example, haha.

Anyway, I am interested to hear what others think. I thought they would've handled a lot of this by now given the amount of children who use the game but they will likely try to use the fact that they (correct me if wrong) enforce the mandated age of birth entry when creating an account since you interact with other people, no?

Mech - August 12, 2025, 7:37 am

Took my kids away from Roblox a while back. That and the fact that the games are never ending, making them never get the feeling of completion causing them to want to play more and more and more.

Yeah, that's a big one. Those endless loops are designed to keep them hooked, and without a real "finish line" it's easy for kids to lose track of time. Good call pulling them away from it.

This is a problem internet wide, and Roblox does a better job than most. It really comes down to bad parenting, I'm pretty sure you can restrict accounts to prevent chatting with anyone including friends. There are a lot of parental controls are available, as I said, it's just bad parenting.

Oh_Well - August 12, 2025, 8:18 am

Unfortunately most of these online communities have this issue.

Minecraft is no different.

Completely disagree.

They protect pedophilia and are trying to cease and desist anyone trying to speak up about it, the game is literally lolita heaven, it's disgusting.

While yes it is a internet wide problem, Roblox are DEFINITELY not doing a better job than most, they are protecting pedophiles because their game is hugely popular and profitable.

Roblox isn't entirely ignoring the issue though. They've implemented tools like an open-source AI system to detect grooming in chats, and their moderation teams ban accounts daily. From what I understand their CEO has even stated that parents uncomfortable with the risks shouldn't allow their kids to play.

However, many experts and lawsuits argue these efforts fall short, and Roblox isn't leading the industry compared to other platforms.

Ultimately, this is a parenting issue. If parents don't let their children use the internet unsupervised, these problems would be less likely to occur.

To be clear, I don't care about Roblox or the YouTubers covering these issues just for views and a paycheck. But seeing people such as yourself who watch their favourite content creator cover a topic then insists on jumping on the bandwagon of saying a company is protecting pedophiles is fucking absurd.

I'm sorry but listen to yourself, you're saying I'm jumping on the bandwagon, but yet quoting unknown "experts" I mean really?

Blaming this purely on a parenting issue is wild and unbiased, yes parents need to take more responsibility, but this is not a parenting issue.

You clearly spent no time watching the video at all, in which btw he's watching another Robloxer who played the game all his life, and was groomed on there at a young age.

Also, the fact that you insult me for pointing out something like this, kinda shows that maybe I hit a nerve, outing yourself much?

Why you don't mention Discord, Omegle and all the other platforms including various chatrooms which have the same severe issue? Roblox is top of the agenda due to how vast and popular the game is especially with a targeted audience for children. Tools are available to protect your child whilst online, parents choose not to use them.

I just dislike how you worded "protecting pedophiles" because a guy was banned for breaching ToS. You are right, I didn't watch the entire video because I don't want to hear a political streamer giving his take on the matter. I bet you soaked up both of the videos like your life depended on it.

Roblox averaged 112 million daily active users in Q2 2025, with 40% under 13. We're talking about TENS OF MILLIONS of kids everyday.

They have 3.000 moderators while handling 50.000 chat msgs/sec.

That's roughly 1 moderator per 26000 active users.

So no, the company is not doing enough. Not at all in fact.

I think games that are directed and focused on Children should have some kind of ID registering, so essentially a parent has to make the account for them and register with their ID so the company knows their age etc, would prevent a lot of abuse on there imo

Yeahhhh, I mean as a kid I was playing GTA. Clearly an 18+ title, right? But all I had to do was click "accept" on the terms that I am 18+.

Things should have been improved by now but I guess its not an easy thing to do.

I grew up playing Cod on Xbox, it was beautifully toxic, I miss it everyday, everyone swearing, going crazy, but no real harm or predatory behavior.

I only pray future shooters have online comms like Mw2 and the earlier Cods had back in the day ?

Yes haha, I spent so much time with those mod menus, I even made a modded Xbox to host those max player custom lobbies, not ruining anyone's experiences, also loved modding Zombies too, noclipping out the map to see the Der Riese easter eggs haha

Old mw2 still one of the best games of all time

It was awesome. I had a ps3 with jailbreak and I could only access custom/modded lobbies - I can't forget this game where you started with a knife and with each kill your weapon got upgraded and u started over when you died. You could literally do anything.

Damn, good times!

What do you mean a dating feature?

I heard about this on the national news. They don't care about the kids. It's not like they hate kids but what do you expect them to do about it?

Do you want them to use AI to listen to everyone's conversation? My whole point is that if the do something about it then people would be pissed about over stepping peoples privacy and parents wouldn't want Roblox to record what their kids do online. Yet, if you don't do that then how can you provide a solution to intercept.

For Roblox to go after those youtubers for lawsuits. I would be curious at what part of the terms of service did they violate?

The reason is that you or whoever is reporting this info makes it sound like Roblox is suing them because they caught pedos.

It makes it look like Roblox are in favor of pedos on their platform. Yet, in reality it's most likely that they didn't like someone using their platform to harass and bully people on it. This means if they found who it was and they met up in person to beat the crap out of them.

Again I don't know what exactly they did but my guess just from your post. I have seen the national news but I don't remember if they met up with the pedos. I do know some people in my area where they have facebook groups and they look online t instagram, snapchat, roblox, to catch predator.

They then meet up to beat the crap out of them then post it on facebook and worldstar and they censor their own faces. What they do is against the law even though the pedos aren't innocent either and you might not like people that fight against pedos illegall being charged with crimes when you might approve their work... but the law is the law.

I am just more interested i knowing what roblox claims they violated on their terms of service.

To be realistic, all of these social media platforms have a real issue with pedophiles and creeps preying on children, and doing something to address the issue is not something on their priority list. Meta has long had an issue with pedophiles since way back when Facebook was popular, and now the problem has trickled onto Instagram. YouTube has a problem with adult men preying on children in their comments, despite them claiming to have a "zero tolerance for predatory behavior".

A member of YouTube's "Trusted Flagger" program has come out with a statement, stating that YouTube doesn't take "Child Abuse" reports with any type of priority, and how they were over 1k+ reports behind on checking reports specifically related to "Child Abuse".. and this is only in relationship the reports provided by the "Trusted Flagger" team. This member also stated that users reports have little, to no effect on whether comments or content gets removed, and that YouTube prioritizes reports coming directly from the "Trusted Flagger" program. There was an interview done with the BBC in relation to this issue some time ago that got swept under the rug.

So while many criticize some of the safety measures that are coming out to address issues related to children's safety online.. some of them are needed. There are unfortunately many parents who don't watch their children online, nor check their children's devices.. and there are people that will take advantage of this. While I value my privacy online, I also value keeping children safe online. Children shouldn't have to come online and worry about adult men preying on them from every angle.
