

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: 6,500 Axis Servers Expose Remoting Protocol; 4,000 in U.S. Vulnerable to Exploits

Stanley - August 16, 2025, 7:20 pm

6,500 Axis Servers Expose Remoting Protocol; 4,000 in U.S. Vulnerable to Exploits

Cybersecurity researchers have disclosed multiple security flaws in video surveillance products from Axis Communications that, if successfully exploited, could expose them to takeover attacks. "The attack results in pre-authentication remote code execution on Axis Device Manager, a server used to configure and manage fleets of cameras, and the Axis Camera Station, client software used to view

<https://thehackernews.com/2025/08/6500-axis-servers-expose-remoting.html>

JoseMar - September 3, 2025, 10:55 am

(Aug 16, 2025 07:20 PM)Stanley Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) 6,500 Axis Servers Expose Remoting Protocol; 4,000 in U.S. Vulnerable to Exploits

Cybersecurity researchers have disclosed multiple security flaws in video surveillance products from Axis Communications that, if successfully exploited, could expose them to takeover attacks. "The attack results in pre-authentication remote code execution on Axis Device Manager, a server used to configure and manage fleets of cameras, and the Axis Camera Station, client software used to view

<https://thehackernews.com/2025/08/6500-axis-servers-expose-remoting.html>

Makes you think twice about what's watching you, even in places you think are secure. Feels like a huge oversight.?

sharn - September 7, 2025, 9:06 am

It is alarming that these vulnerabilities could enable attackers to hijack, monitor, or shut down surveillance feeds.