Massive amount of activity taking place right now:

Quote:Ethereum's staking ecosystem is facing unprecedented congestion, with 910,461 ETH, valued at approximately $3.9 billion, currently stuck in the network's exit queue as of Tuesday, August 19, 2025. The backlog, one of the largest since Ethereum's shift to proof-of-stake in 2022, reflects a surge in investors seeking to unstake their Ether amid market shifts and anticipation of staking-enabled ETFs, according to CoinDesk.

The exit queue, which processes validator withdrawals, has swelled to a 16-day wait, driven by major platforms like Lido and Coinbase, which account for 40% and 15% of the queued ETH, respectively. "This level of unstaking suggests investors are repositioning for liquidity or new opportunities," blockchain analyst Sarah Tran told CoinDesk. With 30% of Ethereum's total supply about 36 million ETH staked, the queue represents 2.5% of the staked pool, per Dune Analytics.

Seeing big players snap up almost a billion dollars in ETH... it's just wild. It's not just retail hype anymore. This is serious institutional money moving in. Makes you wonder what they're seeing that we aren't.

Traditional companies entering crypto at this scale is wild.

It shows the market is maturing fast.

Ethereum is really an underrated currency, and the main reason for its lack of fame is that it appeared during the peak of Bitcoin's glory.
