failed to provide my service 4 months in a row: constantly having to message him to renew the payment profile on netflix 13 months I paid for. Takes 1-2 weeks to reply.

Has been ignoring me for the past week. Not dealing with this anymore. Keeps making excuses on why it took so long. Also keeps saying won't happen again every time. Nicely asked for a refund. Ignored all my messages.

He hasn't been active here for most of August. Last time this happened he was dealing with some personal issues but he came back and handled everything.

Edit his telegram channel says

Quote:Moe has officially returned back, he is currently resting as it is nearly 4am and he just returned from a flight. He will be assisting everyone who sent a message to @mojenie ASAP tomorrow! ?

Ok so what do I do?

This has happened 4 consecutive months in a row.

That's the downside of the current Netflix upgrade process. Both methods I know of only work for a few weeks to a month and then you have to repeat the upgrade process. I don't know what method MOE is using but he usually resolves these disputes.

Edit. I spoke to MOE he said he would handle this today.

I appreciate you explaining this to my customer about Netflix as he has no belief in this at all. I just was not available to renew his subscription as I was gone, but there was multiple updates sent in group chat that I would not be available until now. He only opened dispute because I read the DM, he said if I do not handle it (while I was on vacation) he would open it. No problem, I am not a scammer. I will be renewing his subscription shortly, I am currently compiling a list of all order fixes for this month, shortly after they will be completed then will re-open sales. I have not accepted any new orders in the past almost 4 weeks, out of knowing I will not be around to handle it.

I will finish the order fixes and update here in topic when done, then later open sales. Appreciate you updating him, he refused to see the support group chat or my DMs.

It's the fact that he promised a "new method" that would not require this going back and forth every month. His new method he claimed would be good for a year straight.

"okay should be upgraded , if it gets revoked you will need the new method like my other customers which you just provide email, i will create temp pass and you can change it after as i only need it one time no more renew. (for new method)"

Can post the screenshot if needed.

Walter - September 4, 2025, 3:23 am

I believe, most of them just grab subs cheap from lower-priced countries and resell. The margins are probably peanuts, but these sellers love to slap on ridiculous 'long-term warranty' promises. Then when buyers run into issues, it's not even worth the hassle, unless someone like you files a dispute and corners them.

Jamika - September 4, 2025, 10:27 am

Did he fix the problem for you, or did he not find a suitable solution?

Hackers - September 4, 2025, 10:39 am

I am of the mind that if I buy 12+ months of something and just 1 day (let alone a week or two) is unavailable, then the seller hasn't provided the service.

I don't think the buyer should give a fuck that the seller has personal issues, or the method stops working. He's selling subs. When I buy a sub, it lasts the whole month - every day, every hour.

When I did account sales back in 2005/6ish, I always just gave the person a whole new month for free if it dropped.

I know times change, but these dispute threads have always been the same.

- Seller doesn't disclose "downtime" in the sales thread or contract
- Seller uses excuses because of downtime

I think that sellers should either be required to put a notice up that they are selling a subscription that might expire & be unavailable for days or weeks... Or don't sell subscriptions.

that's my 2 cents. This same type of dispute pops up all the time. The method or the flaws of the seller shouldn't be the buyer's problem unless the seller advertises the flaws in advance.

Bro this guy just keeps buying more time and more time. I don't want his services anymore and he keeps threatening me that if I don't want to continue the membership then there is no refund option.

The fact that it takes 1-2 weeks every month for him to renew my subscription and then he tries to add "one month extra free for inconvenience " is hysterical because over the past 4 months i've lost 8 weeks of service just trying to get him to renew my subscription.

Could care less if it's a penny or a dollar, it's all irrelevant to me, I just pay Netflix & others directly.

I'm just saying that buy/sell principles and marketing ethics still apply. Who cares if it's a forum, it's just another marketplace and economies are stronger with principles & rules for sellers.

Netflix Premium - 12 Months - $75 - CHEAPEST LEGIT PREPAID - NO KICK SUB ! OG PRICE: $279 - $204 OFF PRICE!

NAH

I don't buy 1 month trials repeatedly, I went through same process with a different seller but for a different platform

It's bullshit, don't support them when they pull this shit, you can buy 1mo sub accounts for $1 on competing sites like G2G. selling a year for $80 and then providing 12 $1 accounts is straight up a grift

That's sad. Honestly, most upgrade shops (if not all) use the same damn methods that every couple of months get blocked or gets blocked by the platforms they're selling on. That makes it hard for them to stay consistent, costs them money on refunds and exchanges, and I have no fucking clue why people keep selling these upgrades when the same nonsense keeps happening over and over.

I had the same issue with some seller here for YouTube Premium — it worked fine for a few months, then started turning to shit, closing again and again every week. I gave up after the last time I reached out and either got no response or had to ping multiple times. These sellers won't last long-term.

Personally, I bought Federali's ebook methods, and honestly, 50% of it I already knew, and the rest was useless unless I used him or other sellers. It's basically one big reselling pyramid. These services and methods always crash at some point. It's a lot of effort, and I don't know how the hell they think they can keep doing all this manually forever.

I would say that at some point he will answer you, it might take some time. But meantime he wont be here.

please don't put everyone in same basket. I have had sold upgrades since more than 2 years here with 0 disputes. Also for Youtube, I have had 0 complaints/revokes/issues for full duration at all. I have done youtube for like 3rd consecutive year for few of my customers. It all depends on what method each seller is using. Not everyone is using trials/family invites/frauds/stuff like that.

If buyer is trying to get the "cheapest" upgrade rather than "few bucks expensive but reliable" upgrade, then nobody can save them. (Ofcourse that's not the case in this dispute, but I am talking in general). in your example of Youtube, there are atleast 4 methods I know of which sellers are doing. Out of which 1 is 99% reliable, 2nd is 50-60% & other 2 are shit but cheapest methods. It all depends on which method seller is using in order to keep the competitive pricing.

As far as federali, I have had only good experiences with him. His mentoring is what trickled me in to upgrades & I have nothing but utmost positive things to say about him. Because once I entered in this, I expanded over & developed other methods & not just Turkey & I did not depend upon him only to develop further. It all depends on how much we can do ourselves as well. Ofcourse now the upgrades market is very much saturated & most of the methods have been out anyways so every other joe is coming up with upgrades shop. What you are referring to is what these joe's do. Sell for a month or two & then disappear.

Yes, I know he has had complaints of non-compliance/delays in past few months but apart from that, he has been a great seller. Again, that doesn't mean I am supporting what has happened here however, I don't have all the info. He has been having issues in past few months but I really hope this all gets resolved & both parties are satisfied.

I totally agree with you! My post might have sounded different than what I meant.

I'm not complaining about federali, I also had good experiences with him. Sometimes he took a bit longer to reply, but he's a good guy and I've had successful deals with him too.

And you're right, not everyone uses the same methods. You can usually see who's solid just by looking at their sales thread and feedback. I didn't mean to put all upgrade shops in the same basket, i just mentioned "most". I just said it because from my own experience, I see a lot of these shops (here and in other markets) dealing with many refunds and "fixes" just to keep going. I just find it strange that all this manual work is even worth it.

Upgrade services are not a secret, majority of ebooks provide cheaper methods of obtaining upgrades rather than the "method" itself. If you pay for one, or any ebook, don't expect it to contain "classified" information. With an upgrade service, it's purely about margins or else it's just generally not worth it without the sales volume. A lot of services have changed so it's easier to outsource the upgrade for cheaper in most cases. For a lot of people outside North America, upgrade services are easier to run and can still be very profitable, same reason why Indians charge $15 USD for work on Fiverr.

Provider's (YouTube, Netflix, etc.) are constantly finding new ways to crackdown on regional pricing and "upgrades" because THEY are losing money. All it takes is a single ToS change or adding a form of region KYC in apps to uproar an "upgrade" service, and that alone can complicate things let alone everything else. However, that being said there are still many successful and profitable "upgrade services" that have their own tried and true methods of fulfilling orders as you can see, a lot of them are mostly unaffected.

In most cases, if something went wrong with an order I'd just refund or pay more for the upgrade on my end. Regardless, shouldn't effect communication.

Whatever the fuck that means, I told him I want a full refund. The amount of time I had to wait cancels out the actual time I had to use the service.

He states that you used the service for 5 months. He will refund you 7 months worth of the service.

Do you think that is fair given I probably had to wait a total of 5 months in between the renewals?

If so then we can proceed, but I don't think it is. If prefer a full refund.

It is fair from a business perspective.

But that does not change the fact that he is a bad businessman.

Not me to judge here but I personally think it's fair.
