100% 100%

In many countries it is more profitable to be on YouTube than it is to run a business.

It's very possible that these are setups, specifically for videos, or if not then there is most likely a general acceptance from the locals because they'll have been made aware before, or after if anyone gets too upset.

It could be organic, but... When the cost of living is low enough and the daily wages are low enough, YouTube popularity becomes a much more profitable business to focus on.

Look at what shithole he lives in. Can you blame him?

Undead - September 5, 2025, 12:03 pm

Just the third world being third world. The more worrying aspect is that this kind of "cultural enrichment" has been imported into the West as well.

Lowkey - September 5, 2025, 12:28 pm

Bait for views and you fell for it.

Poor rookies.

This guy shows up on the news feeds on Instagram regularly. Can't tell you what his problem is, but they've made a meme out him a long time ago.

Makes me want to puke every time I see him come across my feed but for some reason he's everywhere and others have said that location is super popular with the locals

A lot of these video's are just fake and are made just so you would spread it for X reason. In this case because he seems angry.

In the end he got what he wanted.

You have a point to a certain extent. The person who compiled the video, took clips of his angriest moments and put them all together as one to make him appear more angry than he probably is regularly but he has a tendency to be constantly yelling and arguing with customers so there is some validity to the clip as a whole.

The Pact - October 17, 2025, 12:20 am

No one sounds angry? And it's just an Ai voice?

Don't think this is bait for views.

I think this guy is famous in India.

He runs a rather shitty eatery which is very dirty and unhygienic at the very least. Wasn't making much money from his business.

His customers are working class, labourers who just want a cheap, quick meal so weren't expecting "customer service".

Until someone shot a video of how rude and arrogant he is towards his customers. That made him quite famous and people started visiting his shop just to take photos and videos.

He realised he's got this fame because he was rude and so, he's stepped up his game.

If the sound is an ai voice, then you would make the judgment based off of what is real.. which is the visual, not the audio as it's been obfuscated as you mentioned.

He's literally yelling at the man in the beginning of the clip, which is obvious by his movements and the expressions on his face.

You are correct. I realised that later. I hope you will change your name sometime. It bothers me.

Thanks for the detailed explanation. So he wasn't well known prior to the social media attention? I was under the impression that his place was a well known spot, but I suppose I was wrong. Thanks for the clarification.

As I said, his place was known among people of a particular area and class. Mainly because of the cheap food which I think tastes good.

But after he got viral for being arrogant, his shop became a hotspot for wannabe youtubers and those who want to take a selfie with him and post on social media.

The Pact - October 19, 2025, 2:36 pm

Because he's meant to be the Soup Nazi?

INCREDIBLE - October 19, 2025, 5:52 pm

What in the actual fuckery is going on ? that looks absolutely disgusting my God

"Maybe he's just having a bad day."

ClickAds - October 19, 2025, 10:31 pm

some people build their brand around being fiery or blunt. But if it's genuine anger, maybe he's just burned out dealing with tough customers all the time.

Lefty - October 20, 2025, 12:37 am

Wow, wasn't expecting to see him again.

I would assume the power of giving out the terrible food has gone to his head and he just can't cope with it anymore. I don't know what would be his last straw though. He's already putting zero attention into everything haha

Eran - October 20, 2025, 7:33 am

God I hate people on social media more and more each day

To be fair I have watched one food blogger who took a trip to India and made it his purpose to visit this man's shoppe to see if things were as bad as they appear on social media. He recorded the whole interaction and it was almost like he visited a completely different place. The place was clean and the meal that he got from there was good according to the blogger
