IPOs like Gemini's shift the narrative from "crypto as rebellion" to "crypto as regulated innovation," appealing to institutional investors and policymakers.

I got some shares (10) in the IPO. It nosedived after. At $23.50 now. I bought more shares and have 50 total.

I'll likely hold these for a while.

It's not surprising to see Gemini shine during this crypto IPO boom. The appetite for digital asset equities seems insatiable right now. But the real question is whether the market can handle a flood of similar offerings.

I missed open but will buy a good few

GEMI = ticker

Gemini Space Station Inc = name

^ For anyone else that didn't find it immediately because of the overlapping names across crypto/stocks/etc

- mostly just similar names, but this is always on my mind

Crypto may never be as lucrative as it once was, as a whole, but individual tokens and networks can really explode.

With Ai it is EXTREMELY LIKELY that we'll see a huge connection with crypto.
Digital tokens are necessary for automated AI marketplaces

I want my agent buying & selling services & products automatically - not asking me to approve a FIAT payment.

Crypto + AI is an amazing combo, and I think most people are unaware of how fast things are moving.

Give the agents their own crypto wallets!

It's already happening & crypto-enabled LLM agents will only become more common.
