That's a BIG bet. Very aggressive. Wonder how long they're holding...

HODL is the only reasonable option here

It's crazy to think that just a few years ago, companies were hesitant about Bitcoin, and now Metaplanet is diving in this deep. Shows how much the narrative has shifted.

That's a lot of cash to leave stored up though. I agree with the HODL, but businesses eventually have to make choices. If they have to sell in a downturn, that's going to hurt a LOT. On the flip side, a few percentage points increase and they look like geniuses.

$600M is huge! Metaplanet really believes in Bitcoin for the long term.

JoshAllen - October 2, 2025, 5:46 pm

That is a huge company to hold in a very volatile currency.

What do you guys think of the % ownership? They say BTC is decentralized, but if you look at some of the big owners, you can see how there are still companies that can have a major influence on the markets.

decentralized - and pooled.

You're a fucking child, and if this is me bringing problems, then I don't care.

Your group is tainted by idiots.

How is my post spam?

I commented on how the market share in BTC takes away from decentralization because of how much is actually centralized in private companies, and increasingly in government holdings.

If that's spam, then i'll "spam" more because it's on-topic, relevant, and directly related to this thread topic.

You and your group are a bunch of idiots tbh.

Not even trying to be shady, but you'd be better off as exiled black than orange.

You are low quality and you take away from the quality of the forum.

Your group makes it less enjoyable.

Your reply here just proves how out of touch you are with reality.

Me: replies to BTC topic about a big buy with comments about centralization and market share.

You: goes off topic

You are the spammer bud.
