Thread: The small wins that secretly feel like big victories

Yanix - October 2, 2025, 12:21 am

Occasionally, it's not the big-name achievements that brighten our day—but the little ones that provide us with that quiet, contented taste of victory.

Similar to discovering cash you didn't know you already had in your pocket, completing something you have been avoiding or catching the bus as the doors are shutting.

These little victories aren't going to alter the world, but gosh do they increase the morale in ways that count.

What are some of the little triumphs which make you feel like you are succeeding at life?

"discovering cash you didn't know you already had in your pocket"

I was going to say this cause imo that's the best one! Another one is like landing a shot in the trashcan from far away or dropping something by accident, bounce it on your foot & catch it again.

I don't know why but dropping something yet catching it in an awesome way is always something you do when no one is watching! xD

Lol that's true! It's like the universe gives us our coolest moments only when there's no audience and we are all alone ?

Man the other day I did a dubbel bounce on each foot and caught it and my wife was looking the other way at a cat! xDDD

My first small win every day is when I get the first coffee just how I like it :)

Oh yeah, that's a solid way to start the day! Nothing beats the perfect cup of coffee to set the mood.

Exactly! I've literally had bad days just because my morning coffee wasn't good. xD

Haha nooo, that's peak unlucky timing! ? At least you know you pulled off a legendary move, even if the cat stole the spotlight. ?

Haha I feel that one brother! A bad cup of coffee can set the wrong tone for the whole day.

Small wins for me are finishing tasks I've been avoiding, finding lost stuff, or even making a meal that turns out well. Those little things really make my day.
